SELLS SMILES AND SERMONS.

"Lady of Quality" and Merchant in London Engage in Novel Enterprises.

In London one can buy a sermon for one dollar, and for five dollars one can learn to smile like Queen Alexandra. The merchant who deals in sermons has more than 2,000 in stock, and they are classified to suit all tastes. Thus some are dignified, others flowery, others pathetic, others long-winded, and some are even humorous, says the Detroit Free Press.

It is "a lady of quality" who gives instructions in the art of smiling, and she is said to have a host of pupils, all of whom desire to smile like her majesty, and who are assured that they can learn the art in three lessons.

Another curious profession is that of a man who offers to sell absolutely new anecdotes of the king and queen at a price ranging from 25 cents to two dollars. For the authenticity of these anecdotes he vouches, and scarcely a day passes that he does not offer some new story.
