A few minutes later I was sitting in the best of the carriage, and I drove up to the station in a short way, and had my shoes on the third grass walk.

The carriage was stopped at the gate, and I saw a man in a long coat and a hat, who was looking at me with a very curious expression. He was looking at me as if he was looking at a ghost. I saw that he was looking at me with a very curious expression. He was looking at me as if he was looking at a ghost.

The train started. It was only five and a half minutes' run to the station for the Princess's villa. There was no time to lose.

"Are you ready?" I whispered.
"Yes," she answered, her voice trembling a little.

We rose, walked along, and sat down opposite Lord Daynesborough. He was looking out of the window, although it was dark, and did not turn.

"Lord Daynesborough," said I, "you have forgotten your ticket." And I held out my ticket to him.

"He started as if he had been stung," said I.
"What's the matter?" he asked.
"Nothing," I said, "but you have forgotten your ticket."

"I thought it was in England," he gasped.
"No, I am here."
"Spine on my arms!"

"Acquainted with the?"
"I'll have no interference, sir. If you know me, you will kindly be seated and leave me to my own."

Time was passing.
"You are going to Paris with this lady," said I.
"You're insolent, sir, you and your wife."

"Don't say what you'll regret. She's your wife."
Well, of course he was very much in the wrong, and looked uncommonly ridiculous to boot. Still, the way he collapsed was rather craven. I withdrew for five minutes. Then I returned, and held out the ticket again. He took it.

"If you will leave us for five minutes, Lady Daynesborough?"
She went into the next box. Then I said:
"Now, we've only ten minutes. We're going to change clothes. Be quick!"

I took off my coat.
"By God, I'll not stand this!"
And he rose.

In a moment I had him by the collar, and was presenting a pistol at his head.
"No nonsense!" I whispered. "Off with them!"

He might have known I would not shoot him in his wife's presence; but I could and would have done so.

place. I was a great passenger on that journey. She was a pinky girl, and I can only trust she gave him what he deserved. At any rate he never, so far as I heard, came away again.

I asked my way to the villa and reached it after half an hour's walking. I did not go in by the lodge gates, but climbed the palings, and reached the door by way of the shrubberies. I knocked softly. A man opened the door instantly. He must have been awaiting.

"Is it Milord?" he said in French.
"Yes," I answered, entering rapidly.
"You are expected, Milord."

I did not know his voice, and it was dark in the passage.

"I am wet," I said. "Take me to a fire."
"There is one in the pantry," he answered, leading the way.

We reached the pantry, and he turned to light
