The appearance of a pillar of fire, were such a phenomena possible in this twentieth century, might fill the minds of the beholder with apprehension and awe; but to see smoke issuing from a clump of trees anywhere along the North Shore would suggest tramps or picknickers, or possibly boys as the latter happened to be the case the other morning when a telephone call summoned the Highland Park hose company to Ravinia. Heedless, save to see the flames and incapable of realizing the consequences that might result, two small boys kindled the blaze.

While no one condones the starting of fires in any case, one could not help but be impressed with the sentiments voiced by some of the more mature lookers on. "The boys who started that fire ought to be thrown on the flames and roasted," was the observation of one, while like expressions were heard on all sides.

If those people would deal thus with children of tender years for such a misdemeanor, what measure of punishment is left for them. "Let he who is without sin among you cast the first stone." In this condemnation of heedless children these people proclaim themselves as without guile among us; fit subjects for translation!

The chastisement of the children at the hands of their parents together with the fright caused by the mischief, was doubtless punishment sufficient to teach the urchins a lesson to let matches alone. Had the same blaze resulted from the orgies of tramps, one would have thought little about it, but taken as a matter of course.
