A Duty to Readers

There is scarcely an important bit of news in the community which some person does not want "suppressed" in the newspaper columns. Unfortunately a good deal of that which the editor classes as matter of more or less importance is of a nature disagreeable to some one.

There was Winston Churchill's Kentucky Colonel, for instance, wrote to the editor something in this line:

Dear Sir—I regret to inform you that while Major Jones and I were returning home from the club, we fell into a political discussion. We had dined and the discussion grew into a serious disagreement at the end of which I unfortunately shot him. I regret to add that, carried away by temporary excitement I also scalped him. I earnestly hope that no exaggerated account of the painful episode will appear in the columns of your paper.

It is not recorded whether an exaggerated regret of the unfortunate affair was printed but it is safe to say that if it was the colonel, and at least two of his friends terminated their subscriptions on the spot.

We wonder if it occurred to them that probably the paper gained other subscriptions to take their places by printing a report of an event which they undoubtedly considered "of no consequence to any but the parties concerned."

It may save much unnecessary unpleasantness to announce that the Herald considers that it has an implied contract with its subscribers to give them all the news, and that it is thus unfortunately debarred from suppressing items which its editor considers of general interest, even though those it would be most pleased to accommodate do not desire to see them published.—Joliet Herald.

Twenty-five years ago the capital invested in cotton mills in S. C., was less than $3,000,000; now, according to Wm. E. Curtis' research the aggregate investment is $82,237,000. A few years ago, it was the New South, now it is the "busy South."
