THINGS—THUNK.

Pears to me as folks is awful funny, Leastwise some of 'em "Taint only those who has'nt money But at times it's moneyed men. When you ask them for the dough, Money that you have earned, They will look mighty queer, as tho' They was'nt a bit concerned. Many are they, for they say When you press 'em hard, Come around some other day— Hand you out a funny card. "This is my busy day"—or "cut it short," Is what you'll read thereon, A little huffy, from the sort, Who know how to spread the coin. Then the other one will say, My! we've had a lot of sickness, And must the doctor pay, But that's an easy guess. Just see the doctor man, On a future day, And he will evoke it plain That he's had no pay. Just don't want to pay the bills, My! but ain't they funny, Wish there was extractin' pills To make 'em disgorge money. —Oct. 21, 1908.

Three meetings are held every Sunday afternoon in the different apartments, and the work is commendable in that it brings some comfort and peace to men who spend their days in loneliness and suffering.

Mrs. Underwood's Address.

At the Woman's Club meeting a week ago, held at the Library Hall, an address was given by Mrs. W. T. Underwood which calls for more than passing remark. Her subject was "The Golden Age." The value of imagination both to the young and the aged was presented. Vivid illustrations were given from fairy tales and their effect upon the mind to lift it out of the merely material. Mrs. Underwood strongly advocates the inculcation of truth to children through the mystical, and her enforcement of this thought was presented with rare poetic spirit and eloquence. The proceedings were enlivened with some fine piano selections by Edwin Phillips, and vocal solos by a boy prodigy from Lake Bluff Orphanage named Raymond Moore.

A PRINCELY ENTERTAINMENT.

Double Event—Silver Wedding and Bridal Reception.

Highland Park was en fete on Friday evening, Nov. 6. The double event of the silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Steele and the wedding reception of their daughter, Mrs. G. W. Childs, and her husband was in itself an attraction that might well justify a brilliant assemblage. And in truth it was the occasion which made a really classical entertainment appropriate and gave to it a definite object and pervading spirit. From the first moments when the visitors began to gather until the late hour of their departure the personalities of the genial hosts and hostesses were in evidence. The reception indeed was a most interesting feature of the evening, 200 guests passing in file and testing the muscular endurance of the right arms of Mr. and Mrs. Steele and of the charming young bride and bridegroom, Mr. and Mrs. Childs. A spontaneous and general movement was made towards the fine hall of the club house which has perhaps the best dancing floor of any place on the north shore and is equally adapted as a music salon. The program was unique. It was sustained by only three persons, each, however, an artist and each making special appeal to the cultured audience assembled. Mr. George Robert Jones was in excellent form in the opening serenades and captured his auditors instantly. But in the rendering of his interpolated wedding march in honor of the silver wedding he brought down the house and provoked the utmost enthusiasm. Dr. Hugh Schuessler of Chicago, who furnished the vocal solos of the evening, is a classical wonder. His voice is so perfectly under control and his technique is so thorough that the most difficult passages are rendered without apparent effort. In fact, the ease with which the doctor renders his bass variations is a provoking rebuke to the strain of wonder which affects his hearers. For ourselves we confess we would like to have heard him exchange one or two of his classical selections for a good, old fashioned bass solo, such as "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep." The third person of the gifted trio of musicians was certainly not left in the shade. Miss Priscilla Carver was at her very best as accompanist and soloist, and that simply means, to a Highland Park audience, that it was in ecstasies. The social hour which followed the musicale was not the least of the pleasures of the evening. Refreshments were served, and everybody was happy. Altogether the evening was richly spent and the Highland Park club house will not easily eclipse it for brilliancy. The officers' club of the Northwestern Military Academy will give a dance on the evening before Thanksgiving. The management of the academy football team is negotiating for a big game Thanksgiving Day. Thanksgiving evening the annual football banquet will be given.
