The Theatres

"The best musical comedy Chicago has ever seen," is the verdict "The Candy Shop" has received and no play in the history of Chicago theatricals has occasioned so much comment. On the streets, in the cafes, in the cars, visitors and citizens of the city mention "The Candy Shop" as soon as theatrical gossip occupies the conversation. The result is that the Studebaker has been the busiest place in the western metropolis ever since Charles Dillingham's merry play took up its residence there.

The average writer is more or less prone to exaggerate the success of plays, especially in the matter of summer runs, but there has never been any question regarding the sincerity of "The Candy Shop's" claim to success. Every Chicago newspaper has not only commented at length upon the "snap and go" and finish and class and entertaining qualities of Mr. Dillingham's latest success. "The Candy Shop" is probably the most pretentious affair of the sort any city has ever seen and the Coney Island setting with its perfect illusion of a gay corner of that famous playground, its plodding camels, its baloon vendors, its automobilists and helter-skelter merrymakers, presents a scene of gaiety and freshness hitherto unrealized. The Studebaker announces a regular Fourth of July performance on Sunday evening. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday. Reservations for seat orders should be made as far ahead as possible.

Sterling.—The Municipal Voters' league organized to clean up Rock Falls secured a set-back when the city council refused to pass its ordinance prohibiting wineroms and women drinking in saloons.

Nilwood.—Falling to notice the approaching Alton limited, after having waited for a C. & A. freight train to pass, Mrs. William Hagemier was struck and hurled 50 yards by the train. She was instantly killed.

Monmouth.—Esther Landau of Chicago brought a $10,000 damage suit against the Burlington railroad for causing the death of her husband, Kalman Landau, in this city last January.

Concord.—Falling though a defective well platform, the five-year-old son of Mr. Erixon, a farmer, was drowned. The body was recovered.

Havana.—Elijah Snyder, operator, was seized with cramps while swimming in the Illinois river. Warren Sessler, who was also in the center of the river, heard Snyder's call for assistance and succeeded in reaching him. Sessler was exhausted. Snyder revived after 30 minutes.
