

By Arletta B. Canfield

The man who always makes the best of things usually finds the best of things coming his way.

This is none the less true of woman, and the one who smiles when the clouds are thickest is the first to see the sun.

Dissatisfaction to a certain degree is necessary to progress, but it is beyond this that it becomes an impediment to success. If we were satisfied with conditions as we find them, nobody would rise above them.

But even though you are still in the mire and struggling for a foothold on the path that will take you out of it, don't spend your time in complaining about the color or the coldness of said mire.

Use your strength in the upward pull and keep your eyes in that direction; then you will find neither time nor breath to whine about the situation.

Try to be Satisfied.

If you have not income enough to allow you to dress as well as your neighbor or to enjoy amusements such as he indulges in, does it help matters any for you to go around with a corrugated countenance and a disposition like a buzz-saw?

The result is that everybody gets as far away from you as circumstances will allow and you have yourself to thank for it.

The woman who allows herself to develop into an animated lemon because her husband is not well enough off to provide a servant for her is another nuisance whom all like at a distance. Growls never yet lightened a load.

You may make up your mind that no matter how ill you think the world is treating you, there are others not very far away worse off than you are. And if you would spend a little of your time in trying to find such persons and alleviating their woes a tiny bit, your own would assume a less lugubrious appearance.

Whatever you are, and wherever your lot is cast, make the best of it while the situation is yours, and work to better it at the same time.

Making the best of things does not mean that you should sit down, satisfied with all conditions, but that you should not use your energies in abusing these conditions. but in trying to make them better. If you are a square peg in a round hole, don't wear off all the corners trying to get even with the world for putting you there, but invest in cushions and pad the way for escape.

A Word to Wives.

There are wives, plenty of them, who resent being held in the bonds of wifehood and motherhood. If such women would only turn their vision inward for a minute, instead of allowing it to wander all over creation anywhere except home, they would see so many places for the application of their wasted energy that their homes would be ideal resting places for the god of love, where he could abide forevermore in peace and comfort.

It is this failure to make the best of things that disrupts homes and sends husbands and wives adrift on a restless sea. There are sacrifices to be made on both sides of the marriage partnership. No man who has been living alone but has grown selfish to a lesser or greater degree. The same is true of woman. It stands to reason that unless each makes of things and sacrifices some wishes to those of the other there will be discord. So, it is wise to make up the mind beforehand to do this cheerfully, each for love of the other, and the "best of things" will soon become the best things in reality.

Never stop aspiring to something higher all the way on your life journey, but don't allow your disposition to be packed away in the pickle jar while you are doing it.—Arletta B. Canfield.

The Theatres

Advices from the Studebaker have it that Elsie Janis in "The Fair Co-Ed," that wonderfully popular play of youth and college days, will leave Michigan avenue Saturday evening, September 18th, after completing a second-season engagement quite as large in proportion and satisfying financially as during the first weeks of last year's long run. The air of jollity and cheerfulness will not depart with the fascinating Miss Janis for the next attraction scheduled for Chicago's most popular playhouse is a new production, "The Old Town," by name, in which the favorite comedians, Montgomery and Stone will star. The opening date of the new play is Thursday evening, September 23rd, and Charles Dillingham, who presented Miss Janis is also sponsor for the latest offering.

"The Old Town" is by George Ade and Gustav Luders, than whom there are no more versatile and successful writers for the American stage. Mr. Ade's "College Widow," "County Chairman," "Fair Co-Ed" and many others are known from coast to coast and the brilliant music given us in "The Prince of Pilsen," "The Sho-Gun," "King Dodo" and others by Gustav Luders is sufficient guarantee of the musical quality of his new score. Montgomery and Stone have at last given up their former success "The Red Mill," and their new vehicle promises quite as much as their last few seasons' offering. The scenes of the play are all laid in this country—an innovation in high class musical comedy setting—and the entire play is distinctly American. The stars will be seen in some new specialties the character of which should make them the most talked about theatrical novelties of the season. The company numbers more than a hundred people, not including Montgomery and Stone or the principals, Allene Crater, Ethel Johnson, May rengler, Flo Hengler, Shirley Kellog, Irene Howley, Ida Adams, D. L. Don, John Hendricks, Charles Dox, Claude Cooper, Ira Law, Lester Keith and Harry Lillford are included in the cast of notables secured for the support of Mr. Dillingham's noted stars and Thursday evening's opening at the Studebaker will be the most important "first night production" of the theatrical year. During the engagement of "The Old Town," performances will be given every week-day evening, with matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays, as usual.
