The Theatres

"This place of ours is just about as exclusive as a Turkish bath on a Saturday night," said Mrs. Billwether in "The Old Town," and the audience proceeds quite properly to rend large, ragged holes in the roof of the Studebaker Theatre, where Montgomery and Stone are starring in the new Gerny Ade play.

"The Old Town sweeps into triumph," is what Charles Collins, the well-known Chicago critic, said of Charles Dillingham's newest production, but Mr. Collins was no more lavish in his praise of this elaborate musical play than were his fellow critics in the Windy City. The company numbers some ninety-eight people, the scenery will give you some new ideas regarding stage settings, the costumes can have front seats at any Dressmakers' Convention, and unless you make bookings early you will have to sit in the last row at any performance given by Montgomery and Stone at the Studebaker. In other words, it's another Studebaker success.
