H. B. Warner in "These Are My People."

It is only four seasons ago that H. B. Warner came to this country to act as leading man for Eleanor Robson. Next Sunday, Nov. 28, his name will shine forth in electric letters from the front of the Studebaker, a full-fledged star in one of the most promising new plays of the year, Edwin Milton Boyle's "These Are My People," a sequel to his "The Squaw Man."

In a way, he is decidedly English, but certainly the kind of an Englishman we should like to see more often. In his new play Warner plays the part of the little Hal of "The Squaw Man" developed into a young man of twenty-five or so, and put through a course of sprout in being trained as an English gentleman, without having robbed him of his love for the land of his birth. It is a part that should suit Warner to a T.

Getting Results.

"A man ought to be a good mechanic in order to get satisfactory results from an automobile." "Yes," answered Mr. Chuggins; "but it's still better to be a good financier." -Washington Star.

Interesting Experiment.

"I tell you what would draw immensely in one of these society minstrel shows." "What's that?" "A number of family skeletons let out of their closets to rattle the bones."

A Big One.

"There is one advantage a telephone enterprise has over other kinds of business." "What is that?" "If a receivership is ordered, they can always hang up the receiver." -Baltimore American.

The Apt Anecdote.

"Our friend displays a rare gift of humor in his speeches." "He does," answered Senator Sorghum. "I never knew a man who exercised better judgment in making selections from his scrapbook."

A Poor Reader.

Jack—Rejected you, did she. I thought you told me you read the love in her eyes. Tom—It must have been a misprint. -Boston Transcript.

Such He Was.

"This man ramped all the way from Nome as a living advertisement of Alaska." "A sort of nome-ad, eh?" -Kansas City Star.

Heroism.

Friend—Who is the hero of your new novel? Author (candidly)—Well, judging by the sales, the man who published it. -Summerville Journal.

Probably.

Ethel—Is she married? Kate—Well, she looks resigned. -Summerville Journal.

She Knew Him.

He—The Joneses will be wondering why we are so late. She—No, they won't; I told them you were going to drive.

Presence of Mind.

Customer (falling down the stairs in a large store)—Help! I've broken my leg! Floorwalker—Cork legs, second floor on the right.

Too Late to Classify.

Today

What am I thankful for today? Well, I don't know—but here are a few Of many things that occur to me And possibly may have occurred to you: First, I am glad because I'm glad And then I'm glad because I know You know I know you know I'm glad— Because you're pleased to have me so. I'm glad I'm living—thankful for The privilege of being here; If I can't have champagne, why then If I can't hold my audience I'm thankful, then, to hear you talk! I'm thankful for my daily bread, Though I may not be blessed with wealth;

I'm thankful that I eat and sleep And have my little share of health; But most of all, I'm thankful now Because in high and lowly ranks There are so many people who Are capable of giving thanks. -H. E. Warner in St. Paul Dispatch.

A Cowardly Egg

A campaign orator was delivering a flood of frenzied eloquence the other evening and departed for a moment from the text of his discourse to tell of an experience he had had the night before in a meeting held in Kensington. "Yes," he said, "the opposite political party was out in force and at every attempt of the speaker to make himself heard he was met with jeers, catcalls, hoots, and hisses which drowned his voice. "When I arose to speak some one hurled a base, cowardly egg at me, which struck me in the chest—" An auditor here interrupted to demand what kind of an egg a "base, cowardly egg" might be. "Why," answered the story teller, "a cowardly egg is one of that kind of eggs that hits you and then runs."

A Thoughtful Soul

Visitor (to hostess whose small daughter is amusing herself by blowing up the air cushion seats of a motor)—"Oh, do you think it's wise to let your little girl do that? So liable to give one cancer, you know! I always let the butler do it.—Punch
