THE ELIMINATION OF PETER BIGGER.

Peter Bigger, lager swigger. Used to be a funny figure. So much he'd swig, he got so big. He'd have won the prize if he'd been a pig. The lager oozed out through his skin— You'd think a brew'y was within. It made you 'fraid if he should 'splode The flood would wash away the road. At last a drouth came over the land A Carrie-Nation preachin' band, With little hatchets, went all 'round Smashed every case and keg they found, Till "arid regions" did abound So much that not a drop of beer, For love nor money, cheap or dear, Could be procured from far or near. Then Peter Bigger took a fall; He shrank down into Peter Small. The brew'y failed, the fountain dried Which long had laved his unctious hide; And in the arid desert wide, Naught else but woe did him betide. Now, Peter was only common clay, And without moisture could not stay. One day, just like the "one-hoss shay," He went to dust, in a carious way; And while he was waitin' for Judgment Day, A cyclone came and whirled him away; And, unless there's a mighty change in the weather, It'll take some time to get him together.

VEILED WOMEN OF THE EAST

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Veiled women of the East, what thoughts arise Behind the guarded of your eyes? Does that great racial impulse to be free Surge in upon you like a storm urged sea? Or has tradition gained complete control Of yearning heart and outward reaching soul; And given the tragic dullness of content, To check your spirit in its upward bent?

Veiled women of the East, your veils were wrought By centuries of misdirected thought; But now the old world rights itself; and all The binding fetters and the veils shall fall; The slaves must rise, and claim the Queen's estate— Man's mental comrade and his equal mate Not till all women find this second birth. Can God be wholly glad He made the earth.
