

STREET NAMES AS MEMORIALS.

In Paris, where one may visit the Street of the Fourth of September, it will be possible presently to traverse also the Street of Edward VII. By designation in the latter instance France will honor a late great and good English friend; in the other case the beginning after Sedan is commemorated of the present republic.

Considering the array of New York streets and avenues running to arithmetical terms, we are reminded how far we have neglected memorial opportunities in the naming of our thoroughfares. Certainly we have honored Washington in New York—several times, indeed, in the several boroughs, says the New York World.

A Brooklyn woman lately wrote to the marriage license bureau of that city to know if she could be supplied with a good, honest, sober husband. The clerk in charge explained that, while he had a few model men on hand, they were all married and the supply was entirely too limited for the demand.

If islands continue to rise on the Alaska coast one should be accommodating enough to furnish a stepping stone from America to Asia at the narrow Bering strait.

That marriage is the worst kind of a failure is the opinion of a Gotham broker who is paying his first wife $240 a month alimony and whose second wife wants alimony to the tune of $500 more.

A New Jersey pastor says that women who wear hobble skirts should be spanked. True, but in that skirt there's no chance of getting them in the proper position for spanking.

Cleveland has gone ahead of Baltimore in population, which may be taken as proof that they did not count in the oysters in the latter city.

A Boston milliner's shop has been raided as a policy joint. As if a milliner's shop didn't get a man's money fast enough as it is.

Two Philadelphia newspapers are indulging in a religious controversy. Isn't that just like Philadelphia?

A New York restaurant patron stabbed a waiter who was impudent. Let us hope that the custom won't spread.

It takes a man with a large variety of clothing to follow the dodging of the marcury these days.

A hen can lay four times her own weight in eggs, in a year. That is, she could if she would.

Take a heart stimulant and then cautiously investigate the condition of your coal bin.

Uread disease of the flying men—malaria.

They call girls who get married in September "autumn brides." The men are called "fall guys."

Prospects of a cold spell are not inviting even after the warm weather.

New Jersey's cider crop is the largest on record. Yum, yum!

SCHOOLS IN PUBLIC PARKS.

Boston's finance commission has placed itself upon record as favoring the building of one of the public schools in one of Boston's public parks. If the suggestion should be acted upon by the Boston city government it would probably involve a unique experiment.

While the finance commission does not wish to make its recommendation a precedent, it has in it a suggestion of value. The plan might be worked both ways, locating schools where convenient in public parks so as to give the children a maximum of ground for recreation, and turning the grounds about such buildings into breathing spots for the use of the neighborhoods, especially in vacation times.

The pessimist can always find food for gloomy thought. The facts that the census shows a big increase in population while the death rate is decreasing will prove to that individual, who, like the proverbial Scotchman, is never happy unless he is miserable, that the nation is going to be overcrowded until somebody has to be shoved off the earth to make room for the rest.

Those who have been wondering as to whether America would produce a new race have their answer. The hobble skirt race has been inaugurated on Long Island. It was won in seven falls.

A Tokyo cable announces the Japanese will make a dash for the south pole to try and beat the American and British expeditions. The more the merrier. And may the best man win.

Girls caught shoplifting in Philadelphia explained that "they wanted to be stylish." In order to satisfy that desire they should have confined their misdeeds to smuggling.

A western man claims he is insane and brings forward as proof the fact that he was married three times in three months. "Insane" is an inadequate word, we opine.

New York has formed a league to banish French from the bill of fare. Merely to call a chef a cook would be a great gain.

The cheaper cuts of horse meat now cost 20 cents a pound in Paris. And yet people thought autos would make horses cheap.

Sauerkraut is superior to beans as a diet, says a Boston scientist. Bostonians will take steps to deport him to the Fatherland.

President Simon of Haiti refuses to ride in an automobile, which is proof enough that he likes his job and wants to hang on to it.

Somebody claims that New York is the purest city in the land. It's up to some of the rest of us to clean up, if that's the case.

Japan claims the secret of making pearls artificially. The secret of making hobble-skirts naturally will never be found.

The latest didn't-know-it-was-loaded operator was thoughtful enough to put the muzzle of the gun in his own mouth.

New York Chinese are going to abolish the joss-house. New York Americans might reform the lobster palace.

"Why do widows marry," asks an eastern exchange. Oh, fudge! Why does rain fall down instead of up?

There is no need to fear. The cider output of New Jersey is larger this year than ever before.
