The Man Across the Street

The advantage in viewing things from across the street lies in the fact that the perspective is greater, the disadvantage that the view is not so intimate. "The Man Across the Street," though he is blind in one eye and has the other partly bandaged, thereby closely resembling the general public, views things broadly. Perhaps those who get, or should get, a more intimate view of them can explain some of the things he mentions.

If there is any alley, street or other place in town in a more, or the same, or nearly the same, filthy condition that prevails in the alley running east from North Second Street, just north of Central Avenue, The Man Across the Street hasn't seen it yet and some one should report it to the proper authorities so that it can be attended to.

A Washington correspondent reports that Congress should make it an iron bound rule that absentees without leave should lose their pay. If this should be done Congressman Foss, who represents this district when he is on the job, would be docked $1,975 or about one fourth of his salary for the last session. This is figuring his salary at $25 per day for 300 days although there are only 210 days in a regular session of Congress. According to the Chicago Tribune Mr. Foss was absent 79 days.

Last week The Man Across the Street watched the people who live on W. Vine Avenue wade through weeds which were tall enough to overhang the sidewalk from both sides. This week he is watching the same people climb over these weeds where they lay on the sidewalk as they were left by the men, working for the Improvement Association, who cut them.

From the faint sound of "ker choos" which are wafted across the street and a distant view of red noses The Man Across the Street judges that sufferers from hay fever do suffer. He wonders if any of them ever thought of requesting the authorities to remove the weeds, which line many streets and fill many vacant lots, which increase their suffering.

If any one, getting a more intimate view than does The Man Across the Street, desires to take exception to these few remarks The Man Across the Street will gladly meet him, or her, in the middle of the street provided one can be selected where automobiles do not make a middle of the road confab dangerous.

Exmoor Club Affairs

Mr. Eugene E. Andrews having a premonition of his golfing doom decided that the funeral rites should be properly carried out on Saturday afternoon. It seems that the week before to his amazement he tied with J. F. L. Curtis for first place in the 18 hole handicap getting a card of 85, 15, 70 to 82, 12, 70. The play-off was set for last Saturday and Mr. Andrews evidently aware that he had played somewhat over his head in the original competition, prepared to be defeated. As the men arrived at the first tee the notes of a bugle rang out clearly and six caddies, with mourning bands of crepe, each bearing a flag at half mast and headed by a caddie draped entirely in black emerged from the woods and marched solemnly to the starting point. Andrews then took off his coat displaying an arm band, and sash of crepe. Then taking from his golf bag a ball which was decorated with a band of black he gravely placed it on the mound of sand. Where upon Mr. Curtis made an edifying speech and followed it up by fulfilling Mr. Andrews' premonition. Mr. Curtis won the 18 hole competition against par, 1 down, A. A. Clement finishing second, 2 down. Samuel Slade and W. L. Louderback met with scores of 71, tied for honors in the class C and D competition.

The Exmoor Country Club, which has not had a tournament for a number of years, will revive its annual invitation by staging a three day affair on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Invitations have been sent to all of the visiting players who will be here for the national amateur championship, and these with the local players will make an exceptionally strong field. Play will start with an eighteen hole qualifying round on Thursday morning and the first match round will be staged in the afternoon.

On Friday afternoon there will be a children's party to take place at two o'clock. A program of attractive entertainment, games and dancing is planned for the little folks. Favors will be given at the dance which will be toys of pleasing designs.
