JUDGE SAYS JUSTICE MOVES SLOWLY

Grand Jury System Should be Abolished is Opinion of Judge Charles Whitney

That the "hand of justice" moves slowly in the state of Illinois is the belief of Hon. Chas. Whitney, judge of the Circuit Court, who is of the opinion that the "grand jury system" should be abolished, and the state's attorney empowered to file his information with the court for investigation.

In this state men arrested on criminal charges are thrown into jail until the state's attorney reviews the evidence to a grand jury of twenty-four men. In case an indictment is returned by the grand jury the prisoner is then arraigned before the court. If a "no true bill" is returned the prisoner is given his liberty. In many cases men are imprisoned for months before given a trial. Under the grand jury system no matter who is indicted the state's attorney can not prosecute the case if he desires. In other words he is the ruling power.

In Wisconsin men held on criminal charges are given a trial a few days after their arrest.

A law that would permit the state's attorney to file his information with the court for investigation would meet with the approval of the well known local jurist.

A law of this nature would lessen the expenses of the court. Prisoners have been held in the Lake County jail for six months awaiting trial. They are fed at the county's expense.

Jurists in other counties of the state have suggested a similar law, but to date no action has been taken by the legislature in this matter.

In Kenosha, Wis., recently a man committed murder on Sunday. He was tried and sentenced on Thursday. Had the man committed the same offense in Lake County he would have been held from one to four months awaiting a trial.

A Place For All Things.

Willoughby was nervously watching the time, and as the minutes passed and it became evident that the train could not by any possibility reach its destination on time he turned viciously to the porter and began angrily:

"Of all the dad blinged old heaps of junk this side of the earthquake belt this railroad of yours is without any exception the—"

"Excuse me, boss," said the porter, with a courteous wave of his whisk-broom toward the rear end of the train, "but dere's an observation cyar on de end ob dis yere train, suh, an' if Ah might take de libbity ob makin' a suggestion, suh, you might go back dere, suh, an' make de observations now risin' in yo' midst. De presence ob ladies on dis yere cyar, suh, is mah excuse fo' makin' de suggestion."

Whereupon Willoughby retired to the rear platform and strewed his observations along the track with such effect that one of the ties was seen to be smoking long after the train had passed it.—Harper's.

Rivalry in Prayer.

Turkish dignitaries comport themselves toward European representatives now otherwise than some of them formerly did. Sir Henry Layard tells an amusing encounter between Charles Alison, then chief interpreter at the British embassy, and the grand vizier, to whom Sir Stratford Canning had sent him on important business. In the middle of a discussion the Turk rose from his seat and said his prayers on a carpet spread by an attendant, concluding with the curse on all Christians very emphatically uttered, and going through the motion of spitting over his right and left shoulders in abhorrence. Alison was equal to the occasion. Presently he, too, left off business to pray in a corner, doing it in Turkish and invoking curses on all followers of Islam. To the scandalized Pasha he explained that Christians also had their religious duties, and he had no doubt the formal curses of their prayers meant as little as the Mohammedan's.

The Kind of Eggs He Wanted.

A New York business man has a very delicate boy who is fond of eggs. Now, the father is suspicious of any eggs found within city limits. To his great gratification, therefore, he not long ago discovered what seemed to him an honest marketman.

"Can you furnish me with fresh eggs?" demanded the business man.

"Yes, sir."

"Perfectly fresh?"

"Perfectly."

"Laid the same day?"

The marketman seemed a bit doubtful as to this. "I could hardly guarantee a large quantity that way," said he.

"They must be perfectly fresh," added the father. "they must be three in number, they must be laid the day they are left at my door, and they must be one hen's eggs."—Lippincott's.

A Woman's Beauty

It's worth caring for, and those women are most wise who are most careful of their appearance. Many toilet articles are needed to put the flesh in good condition, we have them all: Bay Rum, Witch Hazel, Cold Cream, Talcum Powder, Glycerine, Camphor Ice, Brushes, Face Powder and Sweetland's Face and Hand Cream.

Reading the Riot Act.

What is commonly meant by "reading the riot act" is better known than the origin of the phrase. The historical riot act was passed by the British parliament in the reign of George I. in 1714. It enacts that felony is committed when twelve or more persons unlawfully, riotously and tumultuously assemble together to the disturbance of the public peace, so to continue together for an hour after being commanded to disperse by the sheriff or undersheriff or a justice or the mayor of the borough.

In the "reading" of the British riot act, which is a necessary preliminary to its being put into operation, it is not customary to recite the whole of the statute, which is rather a long one, but only the following proclamation, which it contains: "Our sovereign lord the king chargeth and commandeth all persons being assembled immediately to disperse themselves and peaceably to depart to their habitations or to their lawful business upon the pains contained in the act made in the first year of King George for preventing tumults and riotous assemblies. God save the king!"

Lincoln's Book Friends.

A few fine books, well known, like a few fine friends, are worth more than many mere acquaintances. The Bible, "Aesop's Fables," "Robinson Crusoe" and "Pilgrim's Progress" were Lincoln's real friends. He used to lie on the floor and laugh over the "Arabian Nights." When his stepmother saw that books meant a great deal more to him than they did to any of her own children she took "particular care," as she said, "not to disturb him till he was quit of his own record." She honored his private bookcase between the logs next to his bed, and the big fire he used to build to read by at night. She knew that he carried a book into the fields so that he could read while his horse was resting, and often she would find him copying out, with his turkey buzzard pen and a braver root ink, some favorite part to remember. "A boy like that deserves to have his chance," she would say to herself.—Arlaine Gilbert in St. Nicholas.

A Bismarck Duel.

A duel in which Bismarck was once engaged had a very amusing origin. It occurred when he was chief secretary of the Prussian legation at Frankfurt. He went much into society and one Christmas attended a big ball. During the height of the festivities Bismarck's attention was directed to an exceedingly pompous individual who strutted about the room. This was M. de Clancy, a noted French duelist. Later on this important individual took part in the dance, but having omitted to leave his hat at the proper place had perforce to hold it out almost at arm's length while he danced. The spectacle tickled Bismarck immensely, and, as the Frenchman came sailing majestically along, Bismarck stepped forward and dropped a coin into the hat. A duel was one of the next day's events. Though it was with pistols Bismarck escaped unhurt, while his adversary was wounded.

Positive Proof.

A New York lawyer said in Washington of a certain exposure:

"The proof was positive—as positive as the proof against the barber."

"There was a barber who was accused of secret inebriety, but his old patrons refused to credit such a charge."

"A stanch old patron went to the man to be shaved one morning. The barber in silence began to lather him, and then suddenly seized him by the nose."

"Lathering away, the barber gripped the nose so firmly that its owner grunted in pain."

"Here, let go my nose!"

"But the barber, still holding on tight, said as he lathered steadily on: 'Can't! If I did I'd fall down.'"

—Washington Star.

He Adored Whitaker.

Whitaker, of almanac fame, would seem to have been a better known name than that of the poet John Greenleaf Whittier. The poet was once pestered by a man who followed him to his rural retreat, declaring that he adored his works and wanted his autograph. He exhibited overwhelming enthusiasm and "yet all the time," said Whittier, "he called me Whitaker."—London Standard.
