SAYS TARIFF BILL IS A HODGE-PODGE

bound to pass the House in the form in which it was introduced, or in other words as it was written by the majority members of a committee of another Congress. No amount of argument or consideration by the members of the House in this Congress could result in changing a single word in the bill. The whip had been snapped in caucus and the bill had been approved there and all the members of the majority sat over ready to shout down any and every attempt to change the bill in any particular.

Why, then, you may well ask, were the fifty hours of general debate on the bill and nearly two weeks consumed in considering the bill paragraph by paragraph under the five minute rule, presumably for amendment? I am sure I do not know, unless it was to enable many members to get remarks out of their system which left them somewhat relieved.

Certainly no one will deny that very much of the debate, especially that under the five-minute rule, was a joke. Much of it was nothing but political football. For instance, the clerk would be reading the chemical schedule, and he would read the paragraph, "Iodoform and potassium iodide, 15 cents per pound." Whereupon some Democrat would get up, and being recognized, would move to "strike out the last word" of the paragraph, an amendment which, of course, would leave the paragraph without meaning. Thereupon, under the rules, he had five minutes to speak to his amendment, and he would proceed to nearly go into convulsions in a political tirade against the Republicans. After he was through, or rather after his five minutes had expired and he had been induced or forced to stop, some Republican would get recognition for five minutes to "oppose the amendment," whereupon he would proceed to get back at the Democrats; and after that was over some one else was quite likely to move to amend the paragraph by "striking out the last two words," and then take up five minutes howling about the Progressives. Some of it was very entertaining, considering it as a recitation of political history, but more of it was decidedly tiresome, and it would be a relief to have some one get up and really discuss some part of the bill for a change, even though we all realized it would be to no purpose.

An interesting side light was thrown on the subject of caucus rule when, on several occasions (one of them was on the paragraph covering ferro manganese), some of the Democrats would slip over to our floor leader, Congressman Murdock, and urge him to pour it into the Democrats' hot and heavy when we reached a certain paragraph which was approaching.

"Of course I am going after them on that," Murdock would reply, "but will you fellows vote with us if we call for a vote and demand tellers?"

"Oh, my no," they would say, "we can't do that; we are bound by the caucus to vote with them on everything. We put up a fight for this in the caucus, but we can't say a word about it here and we are forced to vote for it, but we hope you will show them up, for it certainly is wrong and we wish it could be changed."

But, of course, it could not be—and all because the majority were bound, gagged and delivered by the infamous rule. Under such a system of legislating the wonder is that our laws are as they are. After a proposed law has been run through that kind of a mill it is little wonder if it results in a "hodge-podge." My the time soon come when our legislating will be done in the open; when laws that are proposed in Congress may receive real consideration by members who not only possess sound judgment and a good conscience, but may exercise them fully and freely at all times, as some of them do already.

EVER-READY HOT WATER FOR THE KITCHEN

Unlimited quantities—at all hours, and not a fire in the house—no light to strike. Nothing to turn on—nothing to turn off—but the faucet. Unless you are right up to the minute in modern household conveniences, this seems mystifying—yet simple as the twist of a wrist. It is done by the silent, unobserved tucked away in the corner of the cellar—uncomplaining—requiring no attention, but always ready to serve you. Scrub and clean to your heart's content—the hot water is always there at a turn of the faucet. Start your stews and porridges with fresh hot water, for the Ruud heats it as you need it—direct from the water main—purer and freer from bacteria than your cold water supply. Closing the faucet shuts off the gas and your fuel expense. Write to-day for complete details or see the Ruud operated at our showroom.

Ruud Automatic Gas Water Heater
