PIDGIN ENGLISH.

Language Used in Shops and Homes in Chinese Ports.

In Shanghai in all shops one finds Chinese familiar with English, but often using much pidgin English. "Pidgin" is supposed to be derived from several changes on the word "business," which was first shortened to "busin," then through the form of "pishin" and finally became "pidgin." Pidgin English is the language used in trade and households in the ports of China, where the Chinese and foreigners deal with one another. It is similar in its origin to the mixture of languages known as Lingua-Franca in the Levant and in other parts of the Mediterranean. It is a direct translation of Chinese into English and strictly idiomatic. For instance, they say, "That book pay my," instead of "Give me the book."
The Chinese sailors speak fluently in this odd English. An American lady went to a Chinese tailor in Shanghai to see him regarding putting feather interlarding in a muff. The tailor seemed a trifle dazed as to what she wanted and said, "B'long also same chicken fur?" He wanted to prove his intention of treating his customer right and told her, "My b'long also same you, you b'long also same my—b'long my v'ly good friend," and later, wishing to ask after one of the lady's daughters, remarked, "Miss A. have catchee master?" When this was said China had not come out for woman's suffrage—Amy W. Hutchins in National Magazine.

ELIZABETH ISLAND.

Its Curious Little Colony of Zoological Total Abstinents.

Recent investigations on the little known and rarely visited Henderson or Elizabeth Island have led to the discovery of a complete and curious little colony of zoological total abstinents.

The island, which is uninhabited, is situated about 120 miles northeast of Pitcairn Island—itsself sufficiently out of the way, but famous as the home of the descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty.

There is no water on it, not even a swamp, and it is only six miles long, yet it harbors quite a menagerie—a kind of rat, a lizard, described as very abundant, and no fewer than four kinds of birds, all peculiar to the island. These are a fruit-pigeon, a tortoise, or honey-eating warbler, a little rail or crane and a rook warbler.

The strange thing about the inmates of this curious little natural colony of coral rock, surrounded by waves instead of water, is that two of its inmates are birds, one especially associated with fresh water—the rail and the warbler. These, like the rest, must do without drinking unless the dew can slake their thirst or they have acquired toleration for sea water as a beverage.—Argonaut.

Such is Life.

"Happiness is unattainable."
"How now?"

"It was always my dream to get rich and have a cast iron dog on the lawn. It took me forty years to get rich and now cast iron dogs are out of style."

PREPARING FOR OLD AGE.

If You Reach Sixty-five Years What Will Be Your Condition?

Actuaries say that of each thousand men living at the age of twenty-five, only 500 will still be alive at sixty-five. From statistics declare that of the 500 living at sixty-five 200 will be in want; that eight-ninths of the pauperism in America is among people who have passed this same age of sixty-five.

A man is, of course, sometimes brought to want in old age through accident, through continued illness of himself or his family, through a dozen and one mischances against which even the wisest is helpless adequately to provide. In spite of this, however, there are certain tried and proved recipes by which a young man may guarantee at least the probability that he will not be found among the unfortunate 200 after the age of sixty-five.

Avoidance of wasteful, destructive habits; thrift, economy, the practice of spending habitually less than one earns; the habit of study, which increases one's usefulness and earning power—such are a few of the stable qualities which distinguish the young man approaching an independent old age from the one approaching a condition of want. Stand the actuary's thousand men in a row, divide them into two groups, the one possessing the habits and qualities noted above and the other lacking them, and there would be little difficulty in telling from which group will come the 200 and from which the 300.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

WOOD FROM THE MOON.

Queer Decision of the Most Primitive Race on Earth.

The "north pole natives" alluded to by Captain Amundsen in a recent lecture were discovered by him while he was navigating his little craft, the Gjos, through the Northwest passage in 1907. He christened them "Nechilli" and considered them to be the most primitive race on earth. No white man had ever before invaded their icy fastnesses. Consequently they were ignorant of the use of iron. Their fishing implements were long spears, fashioned out of reindeer horn. They knew no other method of procuring fire than that of rubbing two pieces of wood together. They were, in short, still in the stage of civilization reached by our ancestors of the stone age.

So cut off were they from others of their kind that they imagined their tribe was the only one in the world and displayed the utmost astonishment when told of populous countries far to the south, where neither ice nor snow was. The Gjos and her crew they thought to have dropped from the moon, and the first Nechilli to come aboard felt the deck, masts, boats, oars, all the while whispering to one another in amazement. "How much wood there is in the moon—how very much!"—London Standard.

Too Eager.

There is a lady in Richmond who had in her employ a dark servant of a most curious disposition.

"Did the postman leave any letters, Lily?" the mistress asked on one occasion on returning from a call in the neighborhood.

"There ain't nuthin' but a postal card, ma'am," said Lily.

"Who is it from?" asked the mistress craftily.

"Deed, I don't know, ma'am," said Lily, with an air of entire innocence.

"Well, any one that sends me a message on a postal card is either very stupid or impertinent," suggested the lady of the house.

"Excuse me, ma'am," said Lily, with dignity, "but that ain't no way to talk 'bout yo' own mother!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

From Abstract to Concrete.
"You say her love affairs have progressed from abstract to concrete?"
"Yes; she filed a title guarantee man to take on a builder."—Judge.
