STRENUOUS BANKING.

Clients Faced a Cocked Gun While Handing Over Their Dues. Many years ago gold was discovered at Hokitika, on the west coast of New Zealand. There was a rush to the small Maori village, and within a few weeks seventy vessels, of all sizes and tonnage, were waiting to get over the dangerous harbor bar. The author of "Antipodean Notes" describes the first bank established in the little town.

With the vessels came two agents of a local bank. Their bank furniture consisted of a safe, a pair of scales, a tent and a couple of revolvers. The two agents set up their tent, put the safe in the back part and a plank laid across two tree stumps, in front.

The bank "stood" set down behind the plank; before one man were the scales, a bottle of acid and a notebook; the other held a cocked revolver. The digger brought his gold to the plank "counter," where it was weighed and tested. When the value was determined the testing clerk unlocked the safe, placed the gold in it, brought out a bundle of dirty banknotes and handed them to the digger.

During this transaction the clerk with the revolver looked carefully about to see if any suspicious persons were lurking near.

GOOD ADVERTISING PAYS.

Before You Can Reap a Harvest You Must First Sow the Seed. The ordinary newspaper or periodical reader doesn't dream of the potency of good advertising. One of the largest general advertisers in the United States, if not quite the largest, is a manufacturer in the Philadelphia metropolitan district.

There is a never ending race at that plant between the advertising department and the builders. The advertisers bring in so much business that the builders are kept busy enlarging the factory. Something like $1,000,000 a year is spent in advertising; this company's output, which is a luxury in every sense. At the present moment orders for new business are so far ahead of the capacity of the plant that it would seem a hopeless job ever to catch up. But the advertisers never relax.

The head of that great concern now knows almost better than anybody else that before you can reap a harvest you must first sow the seed. The advertisers are the chaps that are doing that. Philadelphia Ledger.

Where Red Hair Is Disliked. In Cornwall, particularly the Land's End district, it is not advisable to do a person "a red haired tune," though in most parts of England, especially inland, the expression would as likely as not provoke no comment at all or be regarded as simply frivolous.

At a police court case heard in 1907 at Penzance town hall it came out in evidence that the defendant had raised the complaint "a red haired Dane," and this led to an assault. The strong repugnance of Cornishmen to be dubbed by this strange appellation is as strong as ever.

The Celtic nations hated the Danes and were always fighting them. And not only in Cornwall, but also all along our coasts, where the Danes or Norsemen made their ravages, this deep rooted prejudice against people with red hair, "red headed," more or less remains ingrained in the national character. J. Harris Stone in "The English Illustrated."

Boone's Portrait In Oil. There never was but one oil portrait of Daniel Boone painted from life, and that was by Chester Harding, a distinguished artist of Boston, who came to Missouri in June, 1820, and painted it in the residence of Planners Calaway. Boone's son-in-law, where Boone was then living, near the village of Marthasville, in Warren county. The Rev. James E. Welch, one of the oldest Baptist preachers in the state and father of Aikman Welch, attorney general of Missouri during Governor Gamble's administration, sat in Boone's bed behind Boone for him to lean against while Harding painted the picture, the pioneer being too feeble to sit alone. Harding's portrait of Boone now hangs in the state capitol at Frankfort, Ky.—Kansas City Star.

Quiet Elections. Even when political feeling runs at its highest, polling in the commune of Blumenthal in the western France is sure to be conducted without any danger of riot, as for some years past only one citizen has figured on its roll of electors. At election times according to French law, each commune is entitled to demand a separate polling station, although it is a frequent practice to make one serve for several neighboring communes. The Blumenthal elector insists on his full rights and whenever called upon to vote has a polling station erected for his special benefit.

Switching It Off. Miss Elderleigh—So you remarked to Katherine that I looked as old as the hills? Now, don't deny it. I heard you. Jack Spott—Oh—er—but you misunderstand. I was merely comparing your age with that of the Hill young ladies I am acquainted with—twins, you know.—Boston Transcript.

SHE HATED LOTS OF THINGS.

And Jenny Lind Abhorred the Very Name of Barnum. In January, 1866, Mrs. Charles Moulton met Jenny Lind in France and tells her experience in her book "In the Courts of Memory."

Mrs. Moulton describes the singer as "neither handsome nor distinguished looking—in fact, quite the contrary—plain features, a pert nose, sallow skin and very yellow hair." Jenny Lind asked Mrs. Moulton to visit her on the following day, and she did so. Mrs. Moulton writes: "I wish you could have seen her. She was dressed in a white brocade trimmed with a piece of red silk around the bottom, a red, blousy waist covered with gold beads sewed fantastically over it, perhaps odds and ends of old finery, and gold shoes! Just fancy, at 11 o'clock in the morning!"

"We talked much. She hated Verdi and all he had made; she hated Rossini and all he had made; she hated the French; she hated the Americans; she abhorred the very name of Barnum, who she said, 'exhibited me just as he did the big giant or any other of his monstrosities.'"

"But," said I, "you must not forget how you were idolized and appreciated in America. Even as a child I can remember how they worshipped Jenny Lind."

"Worshipped or not," she answered sharply, "I was nothing more than a show in a showman's hands. I can never forget."

SAVED HIS TREASURE.

Clever Ruse of a Blind Man Who Had Been Robbed. "My great-uncle, who was blind," said a Frenchman, "once buried $4,000 in gold louis under a pear tree in his garden. His neighbor saw him do it and in the dead of night came and stole the money, replacing the earth carefully."

"Some days later my uncle brought off more louis down to the pear tree for burial. He soon discovered his loss, and, silently weeping, he, too, replaced the earth."

"He knew whom to suspect, and that night he called on his neighbor. He seemed thoughtful and distrustful, and the neighbor asked him what oppressed his mind."

"Well, I'll tell you," said my great-uncle frankly, "I have 1,000 louis hid away in a safe place, and today a tenant paid off a mortgage, and I have another 1,000 louis in cash on my hands. I don't know whether to seek out another hiding place for this money or put it where the other is. What do you advise?"

"Why," said the neighbor eagerly, "if your first hiding place is safe—and you declare it to be so—I should certainly put this money there too."

"My great-uncle said firmly that that was what he would do on the morrow. It was the wisest course. Then he took his leave."

"And when next day he went to the pear tree again there, sure enough, was his lost 4,000 louis, all put back again."—Exchange.

Landseer's Persistent Wooer. Charles Landseer was a brother of Sir Edwin "and for some years," says the writer of "Leaves From a Life," "was the victim of the most extraordinary persecution that I should think any man ever met with. An eccentric woman fell desperately in love with him and used to pester him first with the most extravagant love letters and then by lying in wait for him whenever he left the house. Finally she issued invitations to the wedding, prepared breakfast and an enormous cake and called for poor Mr. Landseer to a carriage and pair, the horses decked out with white satin streamers and she herself dressed most gorgeously as a bride. But that was the end of the persecution. Her friends took her away, and Mr. Landseer remained a bachelor to the day of his death."

Just For a Starter. "What are you going to call the new baby?" "Reginald Claude," replied Mr. Bligjus. "Isn't 'Reginald Claude' a rather affected name?" "Yes, I want him to grow up to be a fighter, and I fancy 'Reginald Claude' will start something every time he goes to a new school."—Washington Star.

The Irresponsible Child. Small Boy (noticing the Phi Beta Kappa key hanging from the minister's watch chain)—Did you find it again, or is this another? Minister—Why, my little man, what do you mean? I never lost it. Small Boy—Oh, mother said you had lost the charm you had when you were young.—Judge.

Alike in One Way. "He's quite wealthy and prominent now," said Mrs. Starvem, "and they say he rose practically from nothing." "Well, well!" remarked Mr. Boarder. "To—'s just what I rose from—at the breakfast table this morning."—London Answers.

Diplomacy. The Fussy Patron—Why, mercy, this shoe is a G! The Tired Clerk—Pardon me, madam, you have it upside down. It is really a 9—child's size. What a perfect fit!—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
