IVORY NUT TREES.

How the Fruit Changes From a Liquid to a Solid Substance.

Once considered useless, the Ivory nut has become an important product and now adds considerably to Ecuador's export trade. Something like 20,000 tons are shipped from that country each year, worth about $1,700,000, while Colombia and Panama are both increasing their output.

The tree is a stunted palm fern with a short thick trunk which grows slowly to a height of ten to twenty feet, marked by spiral lines or scars left by fallen leaves and fruit stems. The leaves resemble large gorgeous green feathers and are like those of the coconut palm, while the blossoms are of pure white and very fragrant. The seeds or kernels resulting from these are first in the form of suds of sweet, refreshing liquid that changes into a soft, delicious, edible pulp and finally becomes the hard nut of commerce. The nuts mature very slowly, requiring from blossom to ripeness fully a year. The gathering of green or unripe tagna nuts is prohibited by law in Ecuador.

Hundreds of natives, called taguaros, make a business of gathering these nuts from the wild trees of the interior of Ecuador, collect them on rafts and float them down the rivers to Esmeraldas or other Pacific ports, where they are sold in open markets to the exporters.—Argonaut.

Boiling It Down.

They had been married just one year. That was why he risked losing his train by allowing her to fasten a bunch of violets on to his coat. But his foot tapped the floor impatiently, nevertheless, and he frowned as he wondered if his wife's kindly thought would cost him his cozy corner seat. "George," said his wife tremulously, "you don't love me as you used to." "My darling heart of hearts," he exclaimed, desperately exclaiming the word, "what makes you say that?" "Because, George," she answered, "when we were first married it used to take you a whole hour just to say goodby, and now—" tears interrupted her words and ran down her cheeks—"you can kiss me and catch your train all in four minutes!"

He Took No Chances.

A physician known for his coolness and skill in surgery went to a dentist to have a tooth extracted and other work done on his molars. "Will it be painful?" asked the physician quickly. "It'll be just as painless as one of your surgical operations," the dentist replied encouragingly. "Grabbing up his hat hurriedly, the physician remarked as he started toward the door: "I forgot I had an engagement in my office for this hour. I'll see you later, doc."—Indianapolis News.

An Acrobatic Feat.

The fresh air kid had discoursed for thirty minutes on the acrobatic wonders of the vaudeville stage. "But, that ain't so much," sniffed the farmer's son at last. "We've got something in this very barn that will turn without moving." "Hain't neither! What is it?" "Milk."—Detroit Free Press.
