session and at which many members have rebelled, should now find it necessary to bring an official act of his own to bear, in order to bring the session to an end.

Late last night the president announced that he would not take this action inasmuch as Congress was not in a dead-lock concerning the time of adjournment but by reason of a disagreement over legislative matters.

There is always some legislation urged at the close of a session which its proponents allege the country cannot possibly do without another day. Such pressure, coupled with the natural impatience of members to get away and the further fact that a long grind sometimes wears on the nerves and brings members to the point where they will vote for almost any old thing if it will only open up the way to adjournment, often results in very undesirable or dangerous legislation being passed. Fortunately the veto power is present to check such results but it is never to the credit of a legislative body to enact admittedly bad laws, even to purchase the adjournment of a lengthy session, and pass them on to the executive to veto

Suppose the electric lighting installation of a house comprises 12 of the metallized carbon lamps called the Gem:

The consuming capacity of all per hour will be 600 watts
The light derived will be the equivalent of 240 candles

But if the installment is of 12 Tungsten Lamps varying in size from 25 to 60 watts:

The consuming capacity of all per hour will be 400 watts
The light derived will be the equivalent of 320 candles

That illustrates the economic possibilities of the Tungsten Lamp

It enables you to arrange your lights better and provide more illumination where it is wanted. You do not lessen it anywhere for the smallest lamps specified in the example—the 25 watt—have an efficiency equal to that of the Gem, which in turn is more efficient than the old style carbon lamps.

AN INDIAN MARATHON.
Remarkable Speed and Endurance of a Noted Mohave Runner.

In the early days of Ehrenberg, Ariz., a man was frightfully burned by kerosene. There was no physician and no drug store in the town, and so a noted Mohave runner who lived near by was hastily engaged to run to Fort Yuma, a government post directly across the Colorado river from the present town of Yuma.

The distance from Ehrenberg to Fort Yuma, as the crow flies, is sixty miles. By the shortest trail that the Indian could take it was at least seventy-five miles, and he had to swim the river once each way. The Indian was to get $30 for the trip and $10 additional if he returned in twenty-four hours. He prepared quickly for the undertaking and disappeared down the trail.

Within twenty-four hours he was back in Ehrenberg, bringing with him the packages of medicine for which he had been sent. Each package bore the labels of the Yuma dispensary. There was no living being along the trail between the two places from whom he could have obtained any assistance whatever. That Indian ran 150 miles in less than twenty-four hours over a barren, stony desert, interspersed with deep, dry gulches and ravines, in and out of which he was forced to climb, and in addition he swam the Colorado river twice.

When he got his $20 he bought some of his favorite food, crawled into the shelter of some mesquite trees, ate and slept alternately for two days and then reappeared in perfect condition. From A. M. Welles' "Reminiscences"
