Cause of One War
William the Conqueror lost his life in France through his horse treading on a red hot cinder while he was superintending the burning of Mantes, but few people know the fact which gave rise to the campaign that cost William his life.

During the latter part of his reign he became abnormally stout and consequently the laughingstock of not only his subjects, but his neighbors across the water. One day his contemporary, Philip of France, compared him to a dilet of real on casters and suggested that he should be exhibited at a prize monster show. This so enraged William that he straightway made war upon his neighbor, and the loss of thousands of lives was the result.—London Tit-Bits.

The First Evolutionist
The first to suggest the transmutation of species among animals was Buffon, about 1750. The eccentric Lord Monboddo was the first to suggest the possible descent of man from the ape, about 1774. In 1813 a Dr. W. C. Wells first proposed to apply the principle of natural selection to the natural history of man, and in 1822 Herbert first asserted the transmutation of species in plants.

FOOLS CHICKENS; GETS MORE EGGS

Congress Park Man Installs Electric Lights in Coops and Hens Work Overtime

George G. Newell is an auditor. Figures and statistics and chickens are his hobbies. Efficiency is his watchword.

Back of his residence in Congress Park there is an inclosure forty feet square in which he keeps what he calls "150 egg machines." The "machines" belong to the feathered tribe known as White Leghorns. He expects and obtains eggs from these "machines" with the same regularity and accuracy as he does figures from an adding machine.

Gets 17,000 Eggs
He says he has obtained 18,000 eggs from his "machine" in the last year, or an average of an egg every third day for each fowl, and expects to bring this average up to an egg every other day for each hen during 1915. All the hens are laying now and he sells the eggs for 50 cents a dozen. Mr. Newell attributes his success to the fact that his chickens live in two electric lighted coops, go to roost by electricity, and get up at the beck of 100 candle power.

"I figured the whole problem out in black and white," said Mr. Newell. "I found that my chickens were not laying much in winter. They'd go to roost earlier in the winter months and get up later. I figured they didn't have sufficient daylight in which to eat the necessary amount of food and to get the required amount of exercise for good laying. I estimated they got about sixteen hours of daylight in midsummer and only about seven hours in midwinter. I decided to strike an average of their waking hours.

Up at 6 A. M.
"At a cost of about $30 I installed a 100 candle power tungsten lamp in one chicken house and a candlepower lamp in the other. These I connected with switches in the house.

"As soon as the alarm clock goes off at 6 or a little after in the morning I turn on the switch and the chickens get up, thinking it is daylight. The lights are turned off at 8 or 8:30, when it is full daylight and the neighbors' fowls are just arising.

"When it begins to get dusk, along about 4, my daughter, Dorothy, or my wife turns on the lights and they are kept going until 9 at night, when I turn all out except the 2 candlepower lamps. These give just a sufficient amount of light to give the appearance of dusk, and the chickens begin going to roost. I leave the small lamps lit all night, so that if any of the chickens want to get up at night to eat they can do so.

Average Jumps from 26 to 83
"Eleven days after the lights were installed the daily average jumped from twenty-six eggs to eighty-three. During the molting season under the old custom, when most of the food was going to feathers instead of eggs, I got only eleven eggs a day. Now I get fifty-two a day during the molting season. It is merely an experiment in efficiency, and I hope to improve on it."
"Chickens think," said Mr. Newell. "If they know they are going to get plenty of food the next day they'll lay. By my method I keep them thinking they are getting the same amount of daylight all the year around, and I'm keeping them thinking all the time."

Endowment Increased Past Year
The endowment of Northwestern University has been increased during the past year by $458,000, and there is an excellent prospect that $100,000 more will come from the Rockefeller Foundation on condition that $900,000 additional is raised by the first day of June this year.

Don't forget Frederick W. Schumacher can sell you an Edison Phonograph just as cheap as you can buy it in Chicago
