Origin of "Hip, Hip, Hurray!"
"Hip, hip, hurrah!" our modern yell of delight, is said to have an ancient origin. The word "hip" is supposed to be composed of the initial letters of the Latin phrase, "Hierosolyma est perditum," meaning "Jerusalem is destroyed." The "i" in "hip" being substituted for the "e" in "est." When the German knights were persecuting Jews in the middle ages they are said to have run, shouting, "Hip, hip!" as much as to say Jerusalem is destroyed. "Hurray" is said to be from the Slavonic "hu-raj," meaning "to paradise," hence "hip, hip, hurrah!" would mean "Jerusalem is lost; we are on our way to paradise."—Indianapolis News.

Another Topsy.
Little Mary had heard it said that sister Kate "belonged to her mother's people," that baby brother was "his father over again" and that "Albert was a Brown."
"Little Mary," the relatives all said, "doesn't look like anybody."
She followed her mother about the house one day with an anxious look. "Mamma," she finally burst forth, "ain't me people?"—Indianapolis News.

Where We Learned Juggling.
Rankin—Do you know Professor Tom-hemp, the great juggler?
Phyle—I should say so. We were raised together.
"How in the world did he ever learn all of those wonderful stunts?"
"He started to earn his living as a photographer, and he learned all of those tricks while trying to amuse the babies whose pictures he took."—Youngstown Telegram.

Financial Strabismus.
"I'm afraid our new treasurer will ruin this concern," remarked the head of the trust.
"What is he doing?"
"Why, he talks of paying our debts instead of refunding them."—Philadelphian Ledger.

The Wedding.
"This poor girl was simply sold to a rich husband."
"Oh, you're mistaken. I was there and saw her father give her away."—Baltimore American.

LONG HAIR AND LONGEVITY.
A Theory That There May Be Some Relation Between Them.
Did it ever occur to you that there was any relation between a fine, bushy head of white hair and the long life of the owner?
I believe that I can claim without fear of successful refutation that a very large majority of men who have passed the age of eighty years have or had a goodly show of hair on the crown or top of their heads. I by no means claim that this is universal, for it is easy to recall men who lived to even greater age than eighty who were quite bald.
Without any attempt at a chronological list, I jot down a few names that come to mind as I write: John I. Blair, known at his time as New Jersey's richest man, ninety-four; Daniel Drew, New York capitalist and college founder, ninety-one; Hon. William E. Gladstone, English statesman, eighty-nine; Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt, New York, founder of the New York Central railroad, eighty-three; Rev. Edward Beecher (brother of Henry Ward), ninety-two; Hon. Peter Cooper, New York philanthropist, ninety-three.
It would be easy also to name quite a number of men who possessed fine heads of hair who reached only middle age, but my purpose is not to be statistical, but rather to possibly start interest in an unusual subject and see what can be deduced therefrom. —Pittsburgh Press.

RIGHT AND LEFT HANDED.
A Series of School Tests and an Ambidextrous Failure.
Ever since it was proved that in all right-handed people the speech center of the brain—the place from which talking is controlled—is on the left side of the brain and that in left-handed people it is on the right side there has existed a suspicion that if a person became ambidextrous, or able to use both hands equally well, the speech center might be doubled, and consequently talking ability might be improved. Very elaborate tests have shattered this hope.
A German specialist obtained the assistance of the school authorities and tried it out on nearly 3,000 school children. After a careful record was taken of each child's hand preference, speech ability and general capability all the children were told to try to use both hands. For many months an effort was made to have all the children become ambidextrous.
At the end of the test all the teachers and other observers agreed that, though some of the children had succeeded in becoming ambidextrous, the effort had worried them all and had shown no advantages, manually or in speech that in any way recompensed for the trouble taken. Consequently the scientist has decided that nature is doing pretty well with her own system of left side speech and right hand preference. —Saturday Evening Post.

Elephants' Ears.
The African elephant is equipped with enormous ears, while his brother in India has only small ears. Both animals have small, inadequate eyes and are forced to trust to scent rather than vision in the battle of existence. The Indian elephant lives in the jungle, where odors are pungent and easily discernible, but the African elephant is a native of the plains, where the air is dry and hot and barely circulates. The heat dries the moisture out of the tiny hairs in the nostrils which connect with the sensory nerves, and it is only through flapping his enormous ears that he can create the currents of air which enable him to discern any odor at all.
Travelers are prone to ascribe the flapping of an elephant's ears to fury, but this is a mistaken notion. —Philadelphia Ledger.

Gunners' Patron Saint.
Why was St. Barbara chosen to be the patron saint of all gunners? It is one of those things which are to be known and which one ought to know, but does not. Meanwhile there is the fact that she does intercede for all gunners by land or sea.
In the old French navy the Ste. Barbe was the gun room, and the name may be found with that meaning attached to it in all dictionaries. Moreover, in France she is the saint not only of gunners, but of all fire brigades. The sapeurs pompiers hold their holiday on the day of her feast. —Westminster Gazette.
