On account of the rainy weather of last week the lawn social which was to be given on the grounds of Mr. R. M. Vant by the R. N. A. and the M. W. A., was postponed until a later date.

After a week of rainy weather it was a grand night after all and everyone had a good time, didn't they? That was the general comment of the lawn fete which was given on the grounds of Mr. John C. Ender for the benefit of the Holy Cross Church Saturday evening. The lawn was beautifully decorated and the many Japanese lanterns swinging among the trees on the hill top could be seen for miles around and seemed to beckon from afar. The fireworks also attracted much attention. Splendid music was furnished and this, with the pavilion erected for the occasion, furnished means for dance lovers to enjoy themselves to their heart's content. No fault could be found with the refreshments neither, lack of variety or quality, a possible complaint. Those not choosing to dance found pleasure in the many other amusements afforded.

Mr. William Duffy of Chicago spent the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Duffy.

Miss Dorothy Waltemar of Chicago is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Julius Johnson.

The Post of Provenance.
 From his early romantic success to his golden maturity Frederic Mistral, the Provencal poet, had a sort of legendary destiny almost unheard of in the modern world. When he came into the dining room of the little hotel in Arles where he used to tunc after a visit to his museum even the stiff backed British tourists found themselves leaping to their feet with the rest of the company and cordially returning his fine salute. Travelers who have had the fortune to catch a glimpse of him on some fete day at Arles or Nimes or Orange will never forget the impression he made. Standing on the stoic bench of a Roman arena, lifting his black sombrero as the close packed crowds rose in great swelling waves to break into the shout "Mistral!" he seemed the very symbol and type of the legendary youth and joy and beauty of Provenance. His natural eminence was tempered by such natural simplicity that popular response to it was as spontaneous as it was sincere. His gracious presence defied time, and he wore old age like a wreath of myrtle.—Elizabeth Shepley Sergeant, in Century.

Arguing With an Expert.
 Never argue with an expert. It is useless. There is no way of making headway against him. Though you may know much more than he does, you can't possibly get him to admit it. His main defense lies in the possession of his own special vocabulary. No expert is complete without a verbiage. Many experts have nothing more.

Arguing with an expert he always begins by assuming, first, that you don't know what you are talking about and, second, that if you did know what you were talking about you couldn't talk about it intelligently, because you lacked the specific vocabulary that the subject demands. As the argument proceeds he spends so much time asking, "Just what do you mean when you use the word — F — and you spend so much time explaining your terms that you totally forget what you are arguing about. Obviously when a man forgets what he is trying to prove he should immediately quit trying to prove it.—Life.

Water Hamiak.
 If you are fond of parsnips you should before eating them make sure that they are parsnips and not the poisonous roots of the water hemlock.

The water hemlock grows in marshy places in various parts of the United States. Its roots, which look almost exactly like those of parsnips, are full of a deadly poison known to science as spasmotoxin.

Animals frequently die from eating the hemlock and occasional cases of serious illness and death among human beings have resulted from eating parsnips with which the poisonous hemlock roots had been mixed to taste.
