CARLYLE'S FIRST LOVE.

She May Have Been the Blumline of "Sartor Resartus."

During the year 1818 Thomas Carlyle, the Scotch philosopher, was living at Kirkcaldy, and he seems then for the first time to have fallen in love. The lady appears not to have returned the attachment, although she, with great insight, at the age of twenty-two, perceived the genius of her suitor of twenty-five.

In the letter in which she took leave of her admirer she used these significant expressions: "Cultivate the milder dispositions of your heart, subdue the more extravagant visions of the brain. * * * Genius will render you great. May virtue render you beloved! 'Let your light shine before men,' and think them not unworthy this trouble."

Many years after, when Carlyle wrote his reminiscences, he described the episode. He says that Margaret Gordon "continued for, perhaps, some three years a figure hanging more or less in my fancy, on the usual romantic and latterly quite elegiac and silent terms."

The real interest of the story is: Was Margaret Gordon the original of the Blumine of "Sartor Resartus?" One critic would have us answer that, although Jane Welsh might have inspired some of the details, it was Margaret Gordon who was the true original.—New York Telegram.

The Faust Legend.

For 1,400 years the Faust legend—the sale of a human soul to a devil—has existed. The first recorded hint of its vitality is given in the sixth century story of "Theophilus." That story suited the early Christians in their efforts to stamp out the necromancing devices of evilly disposed persons prone to seek power by unholy means. The association of the name of Faust, however, with the legend is not more than 400 years old. The likeliest prototype of the modern Faust is the man of the same name who in Cracow boldly proclaimed himself a professor of magic. In the sixteenth century stories Helen of Troy was bestowed by Mephistopheles upon Faust, and not until the middle of the eighteenth century does there appear a shadowy Margaret in the form of a "beautiful but poor girl," who afterward develops into the Margaret of Goethe.

The Indispensable Boy.

Caller—How is your new office boy getting along these days? Lawyer—Oh, fine! He's got things so mixed up now that I couldn't get along without him.—Boston Journal.

The temple of fame stands upon the grave. The flame upon its altars is kindled from the ashes of the dead.—

STATE APPEALS FUNDS SUIT

Attorney General Will Take Tieup to Supreme Court.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 31.—Through Attorney General P. J. Lucey the state of Illinois took an apeal to the Supreme court from the decision of Judge James A. Creighton of the Sangamon county circuit court in which he granted injunctions Saturday which tied up approximately $200,000 of state funds—salaries of many state officers for two years and mileage for the legislators and the lieutenant governor.

Attorney Fayette S. Munro of Highland Park, representing John B. Fergus, a Chicago taxpayer, notified the attorney general that he would inform him before the expiration of ten days what points he would include in his cross-errors.

CANADAY ACTING GOVERNOR

State Senator Acts in the Absence of Dunne and O'Hara.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 31.—With the departure of Lieut. Gov. Barratt O'Hara for Scranton, Pa., State Senator Stephen B. Canaday of Hillsboro, president pro tem of the senate, became acting governor of Illinois.

Acting Governor Canday will serve until the return to Chicago tomorrow of Gov. Dunne who has been in the east attending the governors' conference at Boston. Lieut. Gov. O'Hara went to Scranton to attend the national encampment off Spanish-American war veterans.

FREED FROM PRISON; YEARNS TO GO BACK

World Is Too Tough on Convict Out on Parole.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 31.—"Captain, I want to go back to the penitentiary in Chester, Ill." A gaunt, scantily clad and shivering man walked into the police station last night and thus addressed the desk officers.

"When did you escape?" the policeman asked.

"I didn't escape, captain. I was paroled, but for a man in my fix this fight out in the world is a losing game and I want to go back to my old cell," the man explained, with a vain attempt to smile. "My name is Wm. Clark, I am 27 years old and was sent up from Chicago for a term of one to fourteen years. A few weeks ago I was paroled. Penniless, without references or friends and in competition with thousands of other unemployed men, life has become unendurable. When I left the penitentiary the officials told me that if I failed to find work I would be welcomed back. Now I want to go there again."

The penitentiary authorities have been notified.

BARS DOCTORS AT ZION CITY

New Court Order Also Prohibits the Sale of Drugs or Tobacco.

Zion City, Ill., Aug. 31.—Drugs and tobacco cannot be sold in Zion City nor can a physician maintain an office in that place, according to an injunctio granted by Judge Edwards at Zion City, restraining B. E. Simons and W. H. Febry from "operating a drug store, selling tobacco or harboring a physician" on their premises.

One of the tenets of the faith founded by Dowie is that of "faith healing," drugs, tobacco and doctors all being banished from this city.

"Uncle Joe" Will Dedicate Fountain.

Danville, Ill., Aug. 31.—"Uncle Joe" Cannon will make the principal address Sept. 3 at the unveiling of the fountain and monument to veterans of the revolutionary war. The fountain, is the offering to the city of Gov. Bradford chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

Baptist Students to Have Church.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 31.—A campaign for $40,000 with which to erect a church for Baptist students at Illinois university has just been completed and the church will be erected as soon as possible.

New Public Library Near Completion.

Abingdon, Ill., Aug. 31.—A new public library which was provided for in the will of the late John Mosser, is now being completed. The building will be formally dedicated within a few weeks.

Seventh Day Adventists Meet.

Joliet, Ill., Aug. 31.—The annual meeting of the northern Illinois conference of Seventh Day Adventists has opened. Nearly 150 tents have been erected.

Will Remove 150 Patients.

Kankakee, Ill., Aug. 31.—One hundred and fifty insane patients will be moved to the Jacksonville state hospital.

Alaskan Ship Goes Down.

Seattle, Aug. 31.—The steamer Admiral Watson of the Pacific Alaska Navigation company, was rammed and sunk at her wharf by the steamer Paraiso. A longshoreman was killed.

WAS IT A DREAM?

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

I am a commercial traveler. I did not in my youth receive much education and am lamentably ignorant of American history. These things I mention because they bear upon the experience I am about to relate. Never having heard or read of the characters I shall mention, it is impossible that I should have conjured them up from memory.

One autumn I left my home for a tour in the middle west. Reaching Pittsburgh, I made it a starting point for visiting Ohio river towns between it and Cincinnati. The Ohio, which the early French settlers named La Belle Riviere (Beautiful river), afforded such attractive scenery that at Marietta I left regular modes of travel, hired a rowboat and, putting my baggage in it, principally a trunk full of samples, drifted—there was no need of pulling—down the river, intending to take in the principal towns by the way.

Shortly before nightfall I came to an island so beautiful that I was tempted to land and inspect it. Tying my boat to the point that formed its upper end, I made my way through underbrush and clearings. There was no one on this part of the island, and I was oppressed by a feeling of loneliness. Returning to my boat, I supped from the contents of a lunch basket I had bought for myself on the shore, wrapped myself in my blankets and turned in.

The night was chilly, and I failed to keep warm. Rising to walk about for a few minutes, looking southward I saw a large dwelling house, most of the windows of which were illuminated. I thought it strange that I had not seen it during my walk at nightfall. Hoping to secure a warm bed, I went to the house, which was perhaps a quarter of a mile distant. As I approached I saw that it was of colonial build, with a pair of wings. Before it was a lawn and behind it were trees.

Knocking, I was admitted by an old darky, and on my asking if I could get a lodging for the night he called his mistress, who came out into the spacious hall. She was a pleasant looking lady about thirty years old and of courtly manners. When I asked her if I could be accommodated for the night she replied with the accent of an Irish lady of high degree that I would be welcome to the best her home afforded and invited me into the living room.

I was struck at once with the furniture, which had either been there for a hundred years or had been purchased from some dealer in curios. There was a large fireplace in the room, in which burned a cheerful blaze to take off the chill autumn air. The lady left me to order some refreshment, and, all being still, I could hear voices in an adjoining room separated by a thin partition. One was the voice of the lady who had left me, the other that of a man with the same inflection—an Irish gentleman.

"I fear," he said, "that the colonel is about to lead us all into a wild scheme."

"It can be no more visionary than our coming across an ocean to build a home on this desolate island. For my part I have great confidence in the man and his scheme. I believe he will be able to carry it through successfully, and we shall be very rich."

"It is you, my dear," replied the man, "who have been infatuated by this man who they say can win any woman. I am engaged in a scheme with one whom I have never seen, but who has won you to it and through you me. Suppose some of the persons he has taken into his confidence"—

I heard no more then. Whether I dozed in the interim I don't know, but presently I heard voices again, one the Irishman, the other a man who spoke in melodious tones.

"We must give out that the land speculation is our real purpose," said the latter, "and offer a hundred acres to each and all of our adherents."

"But suppose there is no war with Spain?" suggested the Irishman.

"We must bring on a war. The general"—

Again there was an interim or a slumber from which I was awakened by a crash. Starting up, I went into the hall in time to see that men with muskets, having broken down the front door, were pushing into the house. Some children at the head of the main staircase were looking down in terror. Then followed a scene of destruction that I shall never forget. The soldiers—for such they seemed to be—were roaring about the house, most of them drunk and all helping themselves to what they wanted. Then suddenly the Irish lady appeared and was protesting, when suddenly I found myself lying on the ground shivering. It was coming dawn, and I saw that I was amid a ruin, the only surviving thing being a well house.

Returning to my boat, I dropped down the river and at the first landing place told my strange experience to a man to whom I sold a bill of goods.

"Great heavens!" he exclaimed. "You must have slept on Blennerhassett's island."

"What's Blennerhassett's island?"

"The place where Aaron Burr's conspiracy of 1806 was hatched. You have experienced or dreamed scenes that were enacted more than a hundred years ago. You have seen 'Blanny,' as they called him in those days, his wife and children, and Aaron Burr himself."
