CLIPPING FROM HOLLAND SENTINEL

Mr. M. Bohl Has Splendid Crop of Apples This Year Some of Which Weigh Eleven Ounces

The following article was clipped from the Holland Daily Sentinel of Holland, Mich. Mr. Bohl was a former Highland Park resident: "Mr. Bohl, who conducts a beautiful fruit farm on the north side, brought some samples of his apples to Holland today. He had a number of Wealthys some of which weighed 11 ounces and which averaged about eighty apples to the bushel. Mr. Bohl's trees are so heavily loaded this year that he is put to it to secure enough props to hold up the branches."

WHEN you get down to brass tacks, or the bottom of the barrel, or to any other situation of finality describable in the vernacular, the literary tonnage on the pleasures of home show a decline. If lackaday, lackaday, lack, Mabel didn't actually sit on a tack, the chances are, if she lived in a big city, 'twas in one of the holes in the wall, they call flats, except in the large stores, where they courtize them into apartments.
