Our Elm Place

Should you ask me whence these memories?
Whence our dreams and soft reflections?
Of the pleasures of old school days,
Of the ups and downs of boyhood,
Of the joyful hopes of girlhood,
Of the rushing of our childhood;
I should answer, I should tell you,
From the days of our old Elm Place,
From the yells of exultation,
In the wooded, deep ravine,
Where the cowboys chased the Indians
Back and forth across the stream;
From the overflowing playground
With its groups a-playing ball,
With the relay race at gym-time,
And the jumping rope at noon,
From the dear old vine-clad building,
With the wheel racks standing by,
And old Glory on the flag pole
Floating proudly, way up high,
From the office full of children,
Trying to find some work to do.

Oh! think ye, my old school mates,
Ye, old veterans of our Elm Place,
Ye, who loved to swarm the stairways,
Who looked with envy at the owner,
Of a pass signed by his teacher,
While you patiently were waiting
For your friends, the "one-ten bell"
Think ye, then again, good fellows,
Of our school days, happy school days,
Midst the Monday morning sessions,
With their songs and thoughtful talks,
Midst the marching out at noon-tide
With our flagmen in the lead,
Midst the dramas of the children,
Midst the Christmas play at Yule-tide
With the songs and slides thrown in,
Midst the field trips and the bird trips
In the early morning sun.

Oh, fast flew those busy school days,
When happy all the day we labored
At the making of the syrup
At the molding of the candles
And the churning of the butter,
Worked for days with old Bob Crusoe
Feasted with him on the barley,
Worked the girls upon their sewing
Dressing dolls their skill to show,
Worked the boys upon their shop-work
Making gifts for friends at home,
Worked at filling flats in science
And at planting seeds in spring time,
Worked at grafting of the fruit tree
And at setting bulbs in fall.

Think ye, once again, my school mates,
O the gala, festive days,
Of the bright autumnal gathering,
Of the flag day drills so gay,
Of the picnic day so famed—
Marvel not then, my fair comrades,
That we loved that good old Elm Place,
Cherish e'er its wondrous spirit
That did make us all as brothers,
Pause ye oft, my many class-mates,
And look you back at our old Elm Place,
And look you then with fondness ever,
At the school-days of our childhood.
