What Women Can Do

Every woman in Highland Park, above the age of sixteen years, can do something for her country. There is work a plenty and of various kinds. In order that every woman may do her work, do the work she is best fitted for, and thus aid her country, the Women's Committee of the Council of National Defense will conduct a registration of women all over the United States. It is planned to hold registrations in each city and community so that when the work is done every woman above the sixteen year old mark will be registered, and may be called into service. If a woman is dependant on her daily earnings, her work will be paid for; if she has time to spare, she will be given an opportunity to help. Each woman, so inclined can aid in her particular way.

That the registrars of this city may be able to carry on their work successfully, registration classes have been started and are carried on twice weekly at the Presbyterian church. The registration week will be held the first week in November, when every woman will go to the polling place and tell what she is doing, what she can do, and what she wants to do. Every loyal woman in this vicinity will answer this call, and everyone who does will enjoy that wonderful feeling of "doing something for some one."

Complacency Our Deadliest Enemy

"If you are about to undertake an enterprise, stop and ask yourself the question: Will this help America win the war?" is the advice of Daniel Willard to the American people. He would have everyone apply that test to each thing done while the war lasts, for, Mr. Willard says, we are in a war that will tax our resources and our endurance, but which we must win.

In private life Mr. Willard is president of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad (and is accounted one of the country's great industrial leaders), and now is chairman of the Advisory Committee of the Council of National Defense. Thus he speaks with authority.

"This war differs from all wars that preceded it," Mr. Willard says further. "Hitherto wars have been between armies. This war is between the economic forces of the opposing nations. That means a testing of our whole people and those of our allies against the whole people of Germany and her allies.

"What Europe wins the war, for she will establish her power in Canada and in Mexico—she will put us under the permanent necessity of being prepared for war, the sort of war she makes, along every foot of our boundaries. Can any one parley over the proposition that we must win?"

"What I have mentioned is apart from the direct and immediate punishment which Germany will visit upon us if she wins. Germany will force upon us her standards, and she will do that after she shall have made us as near powerless as she can. That is what she is trying to do today, with all her efficient millions. The deadliest enemy we can have in such a fight is complacency—the feeling that everything will come out all right, which is so prevalent among some Americans because our unfortunate situation in life hitherto has made so many things come out all right."
