OVER HERE

"You weep for what you know. A red-haired child Sank in a fever if you touch him once..."

The war goes on with all its accompanying horrors, newspapers teem with frightfulness, but still the human mind is slow to visualize figures, dangers, atrocities...

But our boys at the front have seen and realized this war as we have not yet done. Their letters, in many respects are similar. In almost every case the philosophy of these lads of twenty has leaped the gradual stages of twenty years' development...

Think you that the conditions of that great western front are a matter of statistics—of facts and figures to those boys? No, they do not read these things in a slippered complacency out of a newspaper...

In the President's recent speech at Baltimore, he gives us a new slogan: "Without stint or limit." It is a nice phrase but still peoples' tastes are various.

The latest news is that Field Marshall Haig's troops have evacuated the town of Bailleul. That is serious—serious, we say, but just try to picture what that means to our boys...

SPIRIT OF FRANCE IN THE STATUE OF LIBERTY

Every man has two countries, they say, his own and France. Who has crossed her border-line and not felt the quickened pulse of her spirited race? She lives in our hearts...

But yet she gave us something more than strength of arms. With her ready penetration and with her genius for sympathy, she gave us a just understanding. She caught the very essence and spirit of our great revolution and immortalized it in the Statue of Liberty.

That mighty figure with arm upraised is her own glorious conception of the most picturesque struggle for liberty the world has ever seen...

It is you—France—who breathed your genius into that figure—raised that triumphant arm—and lighted that torch of Liberty!
