From the French Department The approximate pronounciation of the names of French towns is again given below, in so far as it is possible to indicate it with the sounds of the English language.

French words are uttered as far toward the front of the mouth a possible. In fact, most of the sounds are formed directly behind the front teeth. Secondly, French sounds are short and quick-staccato, not drawled as in English. Last, and this is quite important, the accent is found on the last sounded syllable, not on the first, where our English ears are occustomed to hear it.

The French Department of the high school will be glad to indicate the pronounciation of any word which the public may wish to know nd will welcome any suggestions. Ypres-eepreh-e as in set. 17,500. Bethune bayteen, 15,300. Albert-albair, 7,400. Noyon-nawyaw, 7,500.

Did you catch the head lines in the great daily?

Do you appreciate, comprehend their significance?

Have you observed that military experts demand one million five hundred thousand Americans on the battle fields of France?

Will you pause and calculate the cost of training, equipping, feeding and maintaining so tremendous an army?

Are you a Yank, a loyal Yank? Don't you think we had better wake up, speed up, dig up and put over this
