

FAMOUS "FIELD OF BLOOD"

Said to Be Spot Just as Purchased With the Silver for Which He Sold His Master.

Just outside the walls of Jerusalem, in the Valley of Hinnom, is a rocky plain known as the "Aceldama" or "Field of Blood." It is the spot where, purchased with the 30 pieces of silver for which Judas sold his master, Here for centuries visitors to the holy city, drying white on their pilgrimage found a resting place.

Gray and barren. It is a desolate spot, solitary but for the chance visitor and a few withered gray-clad monks from a nearby monastery. For a small fee, one of these ancient recluses will show you the sights of the place. Caves and underground passages, honeycombed with tombs, are cut in the rocky field. Your guide leads you down age-worn steps, cut perhaps in the sixth century, into crumbling halls. His torch casts flickering unsteady shadows on the damp gray walls. The place seems to resent your intrusion; it is the "chance of sleep" the hall of the dead. On one side is the tomb of some warrior monk who followed the fortunes of Richard Lion Heart of England to the holy land, dying at the very gates of the city his master had hoped to conquer. He must have died penniless, too, as no many of these soldiers still show his boots had not rested in the porter's hall.

Next Aceldama is a ruined charnel house, said to have been built by the Crusaders for their dead. It is a tiny building, nearly thirty feet long by twenty wide, with one side of masonry. Beneath it are two of the largest caverns, their rock sides pitted with tombs and shallow graves. In the roof of the ruin are holes through which the bodies of the dead were lowered.

The Field of Blood is on the northeastern slope of the Hill of Evil Counsel, where tradition says the villa of Calaphas stood, and where the chief priest and elders plotted the execution of Jesus.

SAVE MONEY FOR FARMERS

Direct Testimony Showing That the Woodpecker Should Be Protected by All Agriculturists.

We are assured on high authority that if birds were as numerous today as they were 60 years ago it would mean a saving of many million dollars to American farmers. The slaughter of migratory birds is surely followed by the increase of destructive insects. Among the farmer's bird friends are the woodpeckers, especially the red-headed woodpecker of the species.

In proof of this is cited the following instance: A pair of them nested in a dead cottonwood tree near an orchard. One day the observer watched them through a pair of glasses. The young birds were about half grown. The parents made 36 trips in one hour, each time with a worm. It is safe to say that they saved 36 apples in that hour—a box worth, say $1. If the birds were worth $10 to the owner of that orchard, or, in the three weeks the birds were in the nest $30. It is plain, then, that no farmer can afford to kill a woodpecker.

All Wrong, Napoleon.

"The dull, dead years of middle age," is the way a Y. M. C. A. worker describes the period in a man's life from thirty-five to forty-five. He says that men of this age are frequenters of saloons, that they are mostly married and that they are not as deathly in the way of citizenship as the male individuals of seventeen to twenty-five, who spend much time with their sweethearts, or the male individuals more than forty-five, for that after passing forty-five and presumably surviving the "dull, dead years," a fellow turns his attention to things
