NUMBER 27

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1918

A SENATOR AT LARGE

James Hamilton Lewis, erstwhile Colonel by the grace of the Governor of the State of Washington, and Senator from Illinois by reason of a minority vote, is in France. One million and a half other Americans are also in France. Their mission is well-known, but the reason why Colonel Lewis is permitted to take up good cargo space in our over-booked transport service has not as yet been made plain.

The explanation is simple. Neither Paris nor the French Premier has ever seen Colonel Lewis. Real soldiers from New Zealand, from Canada and from far away Zulu land have rolled in serried rank down the Paris boulevards on the way to the front. Black men, white men, men from India, men from the great plains of America, have shouldered guns and moved toward the Teutonic cannon in the north. But mere fighting men dressed in khaki have ceased to interest the French. Our government must send something unusual, something brilliant and sublime, something artistic in dress and temperament. And so Ham Lewis with various wardrobes, trunks and hand-bags sailed for France.

Clemenceau has seen him. France has seen him. One day he is a symphony in purple, with necktie, kerchief and spats of the same regal hue, the next he appears in all his military splendor, with gauntlets and spurs, and striding a worthy charger, he rides up the Champs Elysees, bowing to the throngs which line this notable boulevard, and on beneath the Arc de Triomphe—decorated for this particular occasion.

Now those that say that James Hamilton Lewis, erstwhile Colonel on the staff of an ex-governor, has no mission in France, totally fail to appreciate the aesthetic values of men and things.

BUT NOT ALL THE PEOPLE ALL THE TIME

A large amount of the history of this war is being written in the McCutcheon cartoons. A situation arises which calls for discussion and while we exhaust ourselves in verbiage, he gives us the pith of the matter in a cartoon.

Henry Ford, whose son has been exempted from service because of a fictitious value to the Jitney business, ran for nomination for United States Senator in both the Democratic and Republican primaries. Calling himself a Republican more than a Democrat, he preferred to be nominated by the Republican vote. But life is full of irony, for he was defeated by the Republicans and successful with the Democrats.

The morning after election, McCutcheon features the son, a vapid youth seated in his smug bullet-proof office and wondering why father was defeated.

FACTS AND FANCIES

The Republican party is about to undergo a most severe test. The testing ground is Illinois and the issue is loyalty or disloyalty. What are the facts? Mayor Thompson, once intimate friend of Lorimer and like him, denounced by Roosevelt—an original Lincoln Leaguer and typical ward politician—seeks at this time the endorsement of the Republicans of Illinois for United States Senator.

When the German propagandists were urging that no soldiers be sent to Europe, Thompson insisted that our men be kept at home. When liberty bonds were first offered, subscriptions were refused at the City Hall. Through this mayor the French Commission was shamefully treated. Recently a young man was court-martialed because he refused to enter military service. When questioned he quoted Mayor Thompson. The boy is now at Ft. Leavenworth. The arguments and statements of William Hale Thompson parallel the arguments and statements put forth in the American press by German agents.

Thompson was against selling munitions to the Allies. So were the Germans. Thompson was against sending troops to Europe. So were the Germans. And yet with this record he now seeks the second highest honor in the gift of the people.

These are the facts. What of the fancies? The Republican primary is a three-cornered fight. If the voters who are against Thompson divide equally between McCormick and Foss there is a chance of Thompson receiving the nomination. As between Foss and McCormick there is no great issue. Both are capable men with fine records in Congress. The choice is one of personal fancy. The decision therefore should be controlled by the overshadowing one of loyalty. The honor of the party and the honor of the state require the defeat of Thompson. To do this personal fancies and mere preferences must be set aside and the strongest man—McCormick or Foss—receive the entire loyalist vote.

Vote for YEOMAN FOR COUNTY TREASURER

Primaries, Wednesday, September 11th

The earnings of the County Treasurer's office during the past four years have been approximately $60,000.

A large portion of these earnings have been from interest on public moneys, and Yeoman is pledged to place all funds in banks paying interest and to return the interest to the people.

The treasurer will collect all taxes in the future, the township collector office having been abolished, and the earnings will be larger than in the past.

Yeoman's 16 years experience as an accountant makes him fit for the office. He will give you a good clean administration of one of the most important offices in the court house.
