RECONSTRUCTION CAMP FOR FORT SHERIDAN

Men of Old Regular Army Are to Study for Officerships in the New Army

A "reconstruction" camp, to make commissioned and non-commissioned officers out of retired men of the old regular army is the tentative plan at Fort Sheridan to follow the student's army training corps camp, which closes September 16. All men who have served before in the army and were discharged at the end of their periods of enlistment, or because of disabilities from which they have recovered or which can be easily overcome by proper care in a camp of this kind, will be allowed to enter the school and train to do their part in the present struggle.

If the plan goes through, Colonel Robert R. McCormick, the new post commander, just returned from France, probably will be in charge of the school, in addition to being the commander of the 61st field artillery and of the post.

Maj. Edward M. McCaskey, commander of the students' camp, has received orders from the war department to report after the close of the camp at Madison, Wisconsin, as officer in charge of the military organizations of the University of Wisconsin. He was in command of the unit at the University of Illinois last year.

Of 600 camp taught men picked by Major J. E. McMahon, who is now at Fort Sheridan, as possible material to be transferred to the field artillery officers' training school at Camp Taylor, 200 fell down on the examination. Of the remaining 400 it is estimated that 300 will pass the physical examination, through which they are to be put today, and will be accepted into the school.

Pushers are usually in the thick of the business fight, producing. Pessimists growl on the outskirts, waiting to seize on the spoils the pushers win.

Pushers build and pessimists tear down.

Pushers blaze new trails. Pessimists travel in ruts.

Pushers are bright, cheerful, joyous and brave.

Pessimists are gloomy, doleful, grouchy and weak.

A STRANGE DREAM

By ELLEN HUMPHREY.

(Copyright, 1923, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

Mrs. Hill had been alone all day. Even her hired maid was gone, as it was her day off. She was very lonely. It was her seventy-third birthday and she had not even received a card. Had they all forgotten her? All she had, of her very own, were her three granddaughters, Laura, Bertha and Marion. They were all married and had homes of their own, so why should they think of her, although she had loved them all.

A sadness had come over her today that she had never felt so strongly before. If some of them were only near her.

Jane came in and called to her a cheerful goodnight. Jane was a good girl and Mrs. Hill liked her, but she was young and had friends of her own.

"I will go to bed and forget," sighed Mrs. Hill.

That night she dreamt she was on the street of the town in which she lived and there was great excitement; people were hurrying in one direction, so she asked a man what the trouble was. He told her that the Leslie & Marsh banking corporation had failed. Why, that was the bank where she kept her money. The excitement awoke her and she was very glad to find it had been only a dream. After a while she went to sleep again and had the same dream, only it was more real this time. When she awoke the second time she could not quiet herself enough to sleep any more that night.

The next day Mrs. Hill decided to draw her money out of the bank and keep it in her safe at home.

Weeks passed, nothing had happened in the bank and she told herself she was a "superstitious old silly." She had about made up her mind to deposit her money in the bank again, when one morning, after breakfast, Jane came running in from her shopping trip all excited.

"Oh, Mrs. Hill, there's great excitement downtown. The Leslie and something bank has failed!"

"What bank?" exclaimed Mrs. Hill.

"The Leslie and some other name I didn't quite get—why, did you have any money in it?"

"No," answered Mrs. Hill quietly, "but it is strange."

Three days later she received three letters from her three granddaughters. They all knew her money had been in the bank that had failed. She opened Bertha's letter first and it read:

"Dear Grandma—I have just heard the awful news about the bank failure. What are you going to do? I would ask you to come and stay with us for a while, but we are going away for the summer and could not leave you alone very well. Please write and let me know what you are going to do, as I am very anxious about you."

"Lovingly, BERTHA."

Mrs. Hill took up the next one and read:

"Dear Grandmother—I was shocked when I heard of the bank's failure where you kept your money. What will you do? Can't you let your house and keep a room in it? It would seem more like home than anywhere else. I will go to see you as soon as I can."

"Yours, with love, LAURA."

"Well," said Mrs. Hill, and she took off her glasses to wipe the tears out of her eyes, "I wonder what Marion will want me to do?" and she opened the third letter with trembling fingers and quivering lips.

"Dearest Grandma," wrote Marion. "I was very sorry to hear that the bank where you kept your money had failed, but that isn't nearly as bad as if something had happened to you. Now, grandma, dear, George and I want you to come and live with us; we have a nice room and you can bring some of your things if you want to. It is beautiful here on the farm now, so don't hesitate, but write as soon as you can after you get this letter and tell us what day you will come. Hoping to see you soon; lots of love from Marion and George."

Grandma Hill read Marion's letter twice and decided she would go.

Two weeks later found Mrs. Hill in Marion's home; she was made very welcome. Marion and her husband seemed to be very happy. After she had been there some weeks she overheard them anxiously talking about a debt. They did not know that she could hear them. Then evening came.

"Now is the time," she said, and as they sat in the sitting room that evening she arose and started to go upstairs.

"You're not going to bed so early, are you, grandma?" inquired Marion. "I was going to read you a story from the new magazine that came today."

"I will be back in a few minutes," replied grandma, and when she did come back she was carrying a large safety box. She sat down by the table near Marion and opened it.

"Why, Grandma Hill, where did you get all of that money?" exclaimed Marion.

"Count it," answered grandma.

"Four thousand dollars!" cried Marion. "Why, grandma, didn't you lose your money when the bank failed?"

"No," replied grandma, rather happily, "and it is all yours now. You have given me love in place of it, and perhaps I would have not had either had I not had such a strange dream."

Then she told them of her dream and they both assured her she would never be lonely again and that worry-some debt was paid too.

FRENCH WOUNDED

The time has come for us to prepare for Christmas in the French hospitals, and we want to make sure, if possible, that every man, French, American, Australian, Italian, all who are wounded there, may have a Christmas bag. They are already under way at the Trinity parish house. Anyone having chintz, denim, or any art material for these bags, 14x20 inches in size, kindly leave it at the parish house on Wednesday, for workers for the French wounded are to be found all day.

If the French can still smile, who are we to complain about anything?
