AMERICA'S ANSWER

Someone has said that public opinion in America is usually right in the end. Public opinion represents the entire scale of a nation's activity—from the news-boy to the capitalist—from the clerk to the college president, and since we have never made it a cardinal principle to conceal our sentiments, public opinion in America has always made itself felt.

From the very first moment of war when Henry Cabot Lodge declared, "All party lines stop at the water's edge!" our country, both Democrat and Republican, has rushed to the common defense and stood by the president. And the president, distinguished for coolness and judgment, and careful conservative statement, was worthy of his following—so much so that the people gave fervent thanks to God for such a man to follow in the days of peril.

But at last, he who had been so nicely, so scrupulously observant of the boundary lines of those three departments of our government, impinged upon the rights of the legislative in asking for a one party congress. If he had called for non-partisan representatives—men who were willing to erase the lines of party prejudice for the time, and work with the president for the nation's good—that would have been another thing. But a Democratic congress, returned at the president's request and committed wholly to his policy, did not exactly wear that morning face of freedom which we are accustomed to see in America.

When our fathers framed the Constitution, they meant that Congress should act as a check on the authority of the president, otherwise there was always the possibility of imperialism, of High Commands, of all the mockery of a Reichstag.

But the American people have answered "no" to this request. To them it was illogical. It was not fair play. It might have passed with a more plastic people. It did, in fact, meet the approval of many who live sheltered and protected lives, but not with the fighting men in the arena of business and labor; today—not with those who live and suffer. They have not forgotten the lessons in fair play which they learned, not in the American school room, but on the play ground of every school in the land. It is they who have pronounced the president's request unfair. It is they who have answered "no."

Very often the wheels of democracy cause friction and grind horribly. But, to use the president's own words: "That is the price of democracy."

LITTLE THRIFTERS AND HALLOWE'EN

Children of Highland Park, as well as the older people, entered into the spirit of war times, to a great extent, in celebrating Halloween. In many cases the little night prowlers, ringers of door-bells, and window tappers were invited in to the houses and treated to cakes and candies by cheerful hosts who had not forgotten their own exploits in the days gone by. Such hospitality on Halloween recommends itself not only as the gracious thing to do, but also as a wise expedient.

The house of the "slacker" however did not escape some of the old-time mischief-making of a real Halloween. The children seem to know just who these people are and where to find them, having been turned from their door with the curt announcement that they would not take any liberty bonds or thrift stamps. Children are not inclined to deal generously with poor patriots.

PRESS STARTS USE OF "PRINT" PAPER TODAY

A few months ago the Government issued the following order pertaining to the publication of newspapers:

"No publisher of a weekly, semi-weekly, or tri-weekly newspaper shall use in its production any paper except "newsprint," and of a weight on the basis of not heavier than 39 1/2 x 44-50 lbs. All stocks now on hand may be used whether newsprint or machine finish, regardless of weight."

From its beginning the Highland Park Press has used only a good quality of pure white book paper in its publication and had on hand enough paper to run up to the present time. Our supply is now exhausted and in compliance with the government order we start to use "news print" with today's issue.

The Huns agree to our peace terms. Also formally they agreed to the neutrality of Belgium. Also the peace in Russia without annexation or indemnities.

As we are warned that food will long be scarce, even after the war, it is to be hoped that some of our cautious farmers will be emboldened to keep a pig this winter.

Although scientists claim that there has been no appreciable change in the climate of Europe in 1500 years the Germans say it is growing hotter in France.

A friend asks what should be done with anyone who believes the Huns will voluntarily keep the promises they make in the Peace treaty. Well, good judges are divided whether they should be confined in a home for the feeble minded, or be allowed at large with guardians appointed over their property.

Before the Huns get peace, they may conclude it is better to make some effort to pass as human beings.

The public having been requested to confine social visiting over the telephone to a minimum, it is suggested that our women friends not gossip more than half an hour with any one person.
