BOOKS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS FOR CHRISTMAS

This is a suggestive list of some of the books that have always been popular and a few of the newer books which seem to promise like favor. To do the subject justice I would have to write a book myself, so I find it difficult to limit the number, and I fear I must accuse myself of incompleteness. However, the suggestions may be of timely aid in Christmas buying. The books may be seen and handled at the Public Library, and be found infinitely more interesting than a printed list. I have differed from most book authorities, in making up the list. Because children of the same age vary so widely in the ability to read, I have classed the list in groups according to the standard system of grades of intelligence. Because so many people are uncertain about the rating of books, I have placed all kinds of books under the same grade standard, instead of grouping them by poetry, fiction, non-fiction, etc., with one exception: nature study can begin at any time and can be carried to any age. These books are in especial demand and I have appended a short list:

Rhead's Mothercraft Manual is a volume of rare value. It contains excellent lists of books, which may be depended upon without question. There is no one book which I recommend so thoroughly to mothers and everyone having to do with children.

Sets of Books for Children
"The Children's Hour," edited by Tappan.
"Journeys Through Bookland," edited by Sylvester.
"Book of History."
"Book of Knowledge."

Books for Children Below School Age
Any of the various separates of Cinderella, Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp, Beauty and the Beast, The Three Bears, etc. These books in this group will be the first books which the child will try to read itself. They are folk-tales, the literature of early races, well adapted to the early life and budding comprehension of the individual. Under this class come all the rhythmic versions of myths and legends in simple language.

These books will be on exhibition as soon as the Public Library furnace is repaired, and I am able to reopen the building for usual service. I will be glad to talk with anyone who may have especially perplexing problems to deal with, in buying books for Christmas, and put at their disposal all the library resources.

I am free to talk to mothers, fathers and teachers at any time in regard to children's books and reading, but especially now I have time while the library is closed. Never before have people more fully appreciated the fund of live power stored in books and libraries, free for the asking.
