

The Electric Grill

IT'S just like all other Electrical Appliances with respect to obedience. It begins business immediately when you connect it to any lamp socket and turn on the current.

YOU can cook not merely a lunch on it, but a genuine meal—a varied and a satisfying meal. You can broil, boil, fry and toast on it and perform two of these operations at the same time.

NO long labored explanation is needed to make it clear that such a compact little cooking utensil is a convenience. You can use it anywhere if a lampsocket is handy—on the back porch by getting a cord that is long enough.

PUBLIC LIBRARY

Mrs. Dorothy Fischer's new book, "The day of Glory," is one of the small volumes so vividly written that it stays in your inner vision long after you have left the printed page, like a flash of white lightning of a sudden dark night. It continues the story of "Home Fires in France." The first chapter, or story is claimed by its publishers to be the finest short story ever written. However that may be, the book is well worth reading.

"Rosy," by Louis Dodge, is a romance of the isolated Ozark mountains. Rosy lived alone in her cabin there until a storm drove Zeb to take refuge with her, which brings upon her the charge of concealing a refugee from justice. As the story fills three hundred pages, you may know that there is more to the plot than just that, but that is the beginning, and the possibilities are many.

Another mystery story "The Riddle of the Purple Emperor," is the newest Cleek detective story by T. W. and Mary E. Henshaw. The latest is always the most baffling tale which is only equalled by Cleek's marvelous genius. This wild tale has to do with jewels stolen from an idol in India, ill-fated stones, an unfortunate Lady Margaret, and two murders. But everything ends happily and the jewels are restored to their proper owners.

A great detective story, "The Twenty-Six Clues," is claimed to be. Deep in the heart of every reader with imagination, is imbedded the love of mystery, of the excitement of suspense. This story has both surprise and suspense and a plot of which you will not want to miss reading a single line.

"Particia Brent, Spinster," is a novel published anonymously. Some say that they know who the author is, that you may know her from reading this book. I wonder if she is not so typical a "spinster," of today that she might be found in almost any civilized town or city of respectable size? It is a gay and delightfully humorous novel, for gone are the days when spinsters are grabbed and repulsive. But was she a surrealist spinster? They say at her boarding house that it finally ended otherwise. Read it and see for yourself.

"Good Sports" proves that all that species of humanity are not heroes of the race track and athletic field, or Broadway. Some of Olive Higgins Prouty's are found doing the most sporting things in unexpected ways and places. These delightful short stories will be popular hot weather reading.

"Score by Innings" by Van Loan is as it seems, a volume of baseball yarns, each one hot off the bat, will strike a vast audience as having some of the most essential elements of the Great American Novel. Big leaguers and scrub teamers are humorously X-rayed in the most gorgeous baseball language in the world.

"The Undying Fire" by H. G. Wells is of course spiritual conflict. What other fire is undying, especially upon the altar at which Mr. Wells' genius does homage? Man must move forward and fight because there is some God-given thing in his heart which impels him—this is the message back of the story of Job Hess.

Braud, Whitlock as United States minister to Belgium knows all the inside truth of affairs, and he sees them from the view of one of us. His book "Belgium," is a short story of things as they were, and as they are. You will read it with as much avidity as Gerard's "Four Years in Germany" and "Face to Face with Kaiserism" and you will know that the tremendous drama of fact does not have to be put on the "movies" for you to realize its full significance. Besides being absorbingly interesting, you will have the satisfaction of knowing that it is the paramount authority. It is not a French version of things, it is not an English version—as was Lord Bryce's report. It is the "say so" of one of our own countrymen.

Remember the children's story hour in our library on Thursdays in July from 3:30 to 4:30. Adults may remain in another part of the library if they so desire, but may not be included in the children's story hour. Children may come earlier and remain later to take out books and to use the Children's room.

After a telephone conversation is finished and a second connection is wanted immediately, subscribers often jiggle the receiver hook violently up and down, believing that this will sooner secure the operator's attention.

Quite the opposite is true. The signal before the operator does not work properly when the hook is moved rapidly.

Move the hook up and down SLOWLY and the operator will note your signal and answer promptly.
