NUMBER 29 THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1919

THE JUNIOR R. O. T. C.

The proposed plan to inaugurate a Junior R. O. T. C. at Deerfield-Shields is one which recommends itself at once to those who are interested in the physical well-being of their children. It is hardly necessary to prepare a brief, setting forth the advantages of military training for young men, its beneficial results having been so recently proved during the great war.

We believe in military training for the youth of this country. We believe in the discipline which it entails, the larger patriotism it engenders, the higher conception of citizenship and service which it inculcates; but more than all we believe in the physical drill and setting-up exercises of which our young students are so greatly in need. We do not wish to place physical proficiency above moral and mental attributes, but we realize that a well-grounded physical development is of primary importance in the making of a man. What the root is to the tree, such is the province of physical strength in the life of the boy student. The leaves are all very well, both decorative and serviceable, and they will put forth in their season, but without strong well nourished roots, there will be no leaves. The roots come first. "The first requisite for the child," says Herbert Spencer, "is to be a good animal."

In a few days it was the intention of the high school authorities to submit the question of military training for the boy-student body to a referendum vote of the parents and guardians, the training to be in the form of the regular Junior R. O. T. C. which the government planned to establish in various secondary schools throughout the country. According to the latest report on this subject, the proposed plan of the government has been abandoned because of a scarcity of officers competent to train the students. Those of us who are interested in military training for high school boys, however, are hoping that the failure of the government plan will not interfere with the continuation of such military training as the students had last year. There are many who feel that the previous training, particularly in the matter of setting-up exercises, was inadequate to the needs of the students; anything short of this would be a grave mistake.

Every Army officer knows that a man can not be a good soldier until he has first had the setting-up which makes of him a good physical specimen: a company of men can not become a company of soldiers until they have had the necessary grounding in physical drill. Any other kind of a company is a make-shift, a veneer, but thinly spread over second-rate timber which will never stand up under the strain of a soldier's test.

We do not want veneer in our high school. We want the genuine solid material all the way through. The war has given us enough examples of physical unfitness and its consequences to last throughout this generation. That is why we want right now a sufficiency of setting-up exercises and physical drill, to offset the minimum of six hours, the average of seven hours, the maximum of ten hours when those boys sit with their young backs curved over a desk in study.

WHEN THE SALVATION ARMY COMES

"All the world loves a lover," they say; and that is probably the reason why all the world loves the Salvation Army, because they are lovers of humanity. Once more they are coming. They are going to make a state-wide drive to carry on their excellent work with the returned and disabled soldiers, to widen and expand their field of endeavor.

We are glad. We like to be taxed for dimes while tambourines tinkle, pretty girls in poke bonnets smile at us, and some one calls out merrily, "Doughnuts and coffee," thus giving us the felicitous picture of our dime doing actual duty at the front.

The war is over, and the war-time appeal of Salvation Nell will hardly be repeated, but she will come nevertheless—a whole troupe of Nells will trip their way into our affections, whether we will or no, and make our poor little dimes tinkle, and make them tell. We love to give to the Salvation Army, not alone because they are happy, picturesque, and make life seem so abundantly rosy, but because of the far-reaching service to humanity which they rendered during the war. The testimony of the returned men who fought and won will bear this out. We dropped our dimes at every corner, and they lived the music of the tambourines. Girls in poke bonnets gathered them in with smiles and laughter, but they took those dimes and rendered a most solemn account of every one at the battle front. Yes, we like to give to the Salvation Army.
