CITY OF KENOSHA LOSES DAMAGE SUIT

Widows of Henry Strang and George Smith Awarded $4,000 Each by Court

Mrs. Henry Strang and Mrs. George Smith, whose husbands were killed when an auto collided with a street car last spring, were awarded $4,000 each in the Kenosha court, following their suit for damages of $10,000 each.

The jury reported this morning at three o'clock, having gone out Saturday at 4:30 p. m., the deliberations thus covering thirty-five hours.

The suit was directed against the city of Kenosha, the contention being that a depression in the street caused the accident.

Mr. Strang, it is recalled, had just been elected commissioner of Waukegan a few days before he went to Kenosha one afternoon with Smith and others. He had not yet qualified for the office. J. J. Dietmeyer later was appointed to fill his place on the city board.

Smith was head of the Waukegan boiler works. The men and others went to Kenosha on business and had started for home when the crash came which ended in the death later of both men.

Their widows brought suit against the city and their trial lasted all week. It is stated the city will likely appeal the case.
