Marmon Hood and Fenders Are Made of Aluminum

When inspecting a car, find out whether the hood and the fenders are made of aluminum or steel. If the manufacturer is really consistent in his purpose to keep weight down to the minimum, you will find that they are made of aluminum.

Everyone knows that aluminum is much lighter than steel. And since hood and fenders are not structural parts, strength is not a factor. But Aluminum costs much more. That is why many manufacturers do not use it.

The hood and the fenders of the New Series Marmon 34 are made of aluminum. They are not only light, but also do away with the necessity for using heavy brackets, as they are bolted direct to the frame and running board.

The policy of light weight scientific construction introduced in the Marmon 34 four years ago is consistently adhered to in the New Series Marmon 34.
