MUSICAL AMERICA

Now that Ravinia Park has opened for the season, it has become the musical capitol of America. Nowhere else are operas sung so superbly during the summer and under such ideal conditions, and nowhere else is it possible to hear, day after day, symphonic concerts of such high order rendered by one of the great orchestras of the world.

Ravinia is unique in its musical offerings and those of us who, with so little effort, can take advantage of its opportunities are peculiarly fortunate. It is a great thing, too, for our children to have this education in good music, especially in these days of jazz and barbaric clamor. It is a civilizing and humanizing influence whose power over our thoughts and lives cannot be overestimated, although it cannot be measured by material standards.

"Music," as Shorthouse says, in 'The Little Schoolmaster, Mark,' is an art, but a divine art. It is like silence, the most unselfish thing there is. I have indeed, sometimes thought that music must be the silence of heaven." And again, in 'John Inglesant' "Apollo and Orpheus tamed the savage beasts; music will soften our rugged natures and kindle in us a love of our kind and a tolerance for the petty faults and shortcomings of men."

It is pleasant to read of the success which has attended the tour of the New York Symphony Orchestra through England, France, Italy and Belgium under the leadership of Walter Damrosch, whom those of us who enjoyed Ravinia Park in its early days remember with so much affection. This tour, which was recently concluded, has been to the people of Europe a revelation of a phase of our American character and our national culture of which they had little knowledge and understanding, and it will do much to prepare the way for a better and more sympathetic understanding between ourselves and the war worn people of western Europe with whom we are bound by ties of the most sacred associations and with whom we ought to cooperate most heartily for securing and maintaining the peace and welfare of the world.

In an interview recently published in the New York Times, Mr. Damrosch said: "Through music we approached these friendly people with a language which is theirs just as much as ours, and their delight in discovering that we too, speak that language, and love it as much as they do, has been truly touching. The people everywhere have been astonished at the discipline and capability of music shown by our orchestra. They were still more astonished when I told them that we have twelve symphony orchestras in America, which, like ours, rehearse daily through the season."

STARVING CHILDREN

It is hard for us to realize here in our favored land, the extent of the calamity that has overwhelmed the nations of south-central Europe. It is hard in the midst of our plenty to realize that there are thousands of children who will inevitably die of starvation before another spring time unless we and others like us feed them.

It is not alone in Armenia, Poland and Hungary that this condition prevails, but also in Vienna, that city which for so many ages was the proudest city in Europe, and one of the great centers of its gaiety, its art and music and its learning.

The American Relief Administration, of which Mr. Herbert Hoover is President, tells us that the seriousness of the situation can scarcely be exaggerated, and that it proposes to continue until next spring to provide at least one meal a day for scores of thousands of hungry children in Vienna and elsewhere.

The work of this commission, however, depends upon the voluntary contributions of our American people, and our people at present seem not to be interested in the needs of the people in Europe; they are too busy spending here at home the money they made out of the war. There was a time when such appeals as are now being made met with a ready and a generous response, but that time seems to be past now that our nation has withdrawn from its part in the affairs of Europe.

This ought not to be, but we are still suffering from the reaction which followed the war and are passing through an orgy of extravagance and selfishness.

It is well to think about these pitiful, pinched children who are hungry while we have enough and to spare, and it is well, too, to bear in mind that great saying of the Master's, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him."

The address of the American Relief Administration, European Children's Department, is 115 Broadway, New York.

MRS. MARCIA KING SUCCUMBS TO ILLNESS

Mother of Mrs. J. L. Miller Dies in Florida June 14th. Funeral Monday

Mrs. Marcia Jape King was born at Carlyle, Loraine Co., Ohio, Oct. 7, 1842. After some time spent at Evanston educating the family, she went to Florida where she has resided for the past twenty-five years. Her health had been much impaired for more than a year previous to death, but she battled bravely on until June 14, 1920, when she answered the final call at the age 77 years, 8 months and 7 days. The immediate cause of death was cerebral hemorrhage. She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. M. E. Mason of Daytona, Fla., and Mrs. J. L. Miller of Highland Park, Ill. Two grandchildren and six great grandchildren also survive.

Mrs. King lived a long life of sacrificial service. Her supreme delight was in the advancement of her family. Her ideals were high and she was prepared to pay the price demanded by her ideals. She was keenly sensitive to the presence of suffering, sorrow and distress. Where these were, she was found. On one occasion, in Florida, when the man of a poor family passed away, and in the absence of a minister, would have been buried without the service of the church, Mrs. King read the ritualistic service at the grave. In the light of a life so lived the following Scriptures may most fittingly be used:

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

For he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting.

And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

"Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."

Funeral services were conducted at the North Shore cemetery Monday morning, June 28, by the Rev. H. D. Dick.

Mrs. King's favorite hymns, "Sweet Hour of Prayer" and "Abide with Me", were rendered very beautifully by Miss Millie Brown and Mr. Robert Pease.
