A CALL ANSWERED
 By MARY W. FORD.
 "Now this is peculiar," thought Gladys Dornan. "I have traveled over this very trail year after year, and I now am at a loss as to how to proceed from here."
 Jack Dornan and his daughter had been coming up to the mountains for some years now, and it was a trip that they both looked forward to very much. Gladys was only twenty, but a born mountain climber, golf and tennis player. Healthy outdoor sports always appealed to her, and to hike over the mountains was her chief hobby. Today she had insisted upon going alone, telling her father that she wanted to do some exploring herself before the season was over, to which he consented rather reluctantly.
 After hiking for some hours a heavy mountain fog set in, and the entire mountainside was enveloped in a dark and threatening cloud. It was useless for one to proceed until it passed over, and, as a rule, it would last but a few minutes. But today it lengthened into an hour.
 Sitting on a huge rock, Gladys sat there looking at the heavy mist, wondering when the cloud would lift this side of the mountain, when suddenly out of the mist a voice spoke.
 "Hello, what have I here?" exclaimed the invisible one, which sounded very much like a masculine voice to Gladys. "Well, I declare—it is a boot!" and a hearty laugh could be heard near Gladys, but the fog was so dense she could not see who it was. Then someone gave Gladys' boot a vigorous pull, and for a moment she thought she was going to slide off the rock.
 "Well, whoever you are—kindly stop pulling at my boot," cried Gladys impatiently. Now she wished with all her heart she had let her father or one of the party at the hotel accompany her.
 "Thunder and Mars!" exclaimed the masculine voice again. "It's a girl's boot I was pulling at," and again that hearty laugh rang out, echoing down the mountainside. At that moment the cloud disappeared and the sun was struggling to come out from behind another cloud, and finally succeeded. Then Gladys looked down and almost at her feet was a young man looking up at her in an amused sort of a way, which at the time provoked her, and still he continued staring, a smile playing around his lips, but not a word could he utter.
 "Please don't stare at me in that fashion—you look as though you were a hungry bear and wanted to eat me," and Gladys smiled in spite of herself. It was surely amusing, she thought, and at that moment she made a movement as though about to rise, when the young man jumped up almost instantly and exclaimed: "Oh, I say, please don't go," in a pleading voice. "And I do want to apologize," and again he smiled pleasantly, but a questioning look was in his eyes, and his one thought was, "Would she stay—if only for a few minutes."
 "Well, Mr. Man, seeing that you have recovered your voice and that you are not going to eat me up after all, I'll stay for a few minutes." Then, as though a second thought presented itself: "I'm almost starving for something to eat—what say you?"
 "Say, I'm so hungry, little girl, I could almost eat you right now," he cried eagerly.
 "Very well then, it's high time for me to be going, when you want to eat me up—but I simply have to eat, and that's all there is to it, so please don't eat me up yet," she smiled.
 Gladys spread a hearty lunch on the rock, and while munching away at the delicious sandwiches that she herself had prepared, they talked and laughed between mouthfuls, and soon she learned from him that he, too, like herself, visited the mountains every year, and that he was Fred Anderson, a former well-known coach at Mountford, and a very good friend of her father's. It seemed strange to them both that they had never met, but it was due to the fact that they both were away at school during the fall, and immediately when vacation time set in they both left the city. She also learned that he had just been discharged from the service.
 When they arrived at the hotel, Mr. Anderson's eyes nearly stuck out of his head with surprise. "Well, of all things, Ted; when did you get back?"
 "Got discharged about two months ago, and then beat it for the mountains," and at the same time they both shook hands heartily.
 Ted was stopping at a mountain hut, some distance away, but he decided that it was very necessary that he should stay at the same hotel as the Dornans, and needless to say that Gladys and he developed a strong friendship, which later ripened into love.
 At sunset one evening shortly before it was time to return to the city, they were sitting on the veranda of the hotel, when suddenly Ted exclaimed: "Gladys, it's strange how we both decided to start off alone on that wonderful 'never-to-be-forgotten' day alone, as I, like yourself, as a rule went along with a party of hikers."
 "Well, Ted," she answered demurely, "it's just this way: I was lonesome and longing for—oh, for lots of things, and—"
 "I, too, was lonesome, little sweetheart, and we both heard the call of the mountains—I was calling to you little girl, and you answered the call."

LIBERTY SIX

We find that most people have two very definite impressions of the Liberty.

They speak, first, of the wonderful difference in the way it rides and drives; and in the same breath, of the high quality of its construction.

CHILDREN'S PROGRAM
FEATURE AT RAVINA
POPULAR WITH THE YOUNG
 Thursday Afternoons Program Very Successful; Opera Program for the Week

On Thursday afternoon, July 25, the children's program at Ravina park will begin at 3 o'clock, and open with community singing led by Miss Florence Crane. This will be followed by Mr. and Mrs. Marx Oberdorfer, who will interpret the orchestral numbers to be played by the orchestra on that day. It is very interesting to see how still the children sit, and how intensely interested are in the music after they have been told what to listen for, and the music is trying to tell them. Attendance has been fine. This is a privilege that does not come with the easy reach of many communities. All children under fourteen years of age are admitted free and all are free to both adults and children Thursday afternoons.

The last half of the program will be given by Robert Wassman, a pianist. For several years the child has been thrilled by the wondrous tricks of a magician. The children's pageant will take place Thursday, August 5. This will be one of the days at Ravina for the children.

This evening (Thursday) "H. H. Tore" will be presented by a cast including Florence Easton, Earl Kingston, Alice Gentle, Renato Melli, Mary Kent, and Giordano Trinieri. Friday afternoon there will be an orchestra program, and in evening "Thais" will be given. A concert Saturday afternoon, July 27, begins at 3:00 o'clock with Rud Hageman leading. The opera for evening will be "Madame Butterfly" with Florence Easton, Alice Gentle, Morgan Kingston and Graham as the leading roles. Sunday afternoon there will be another concert and "La Boheme" will be given. Evening with Edith Mason, Ethel Hackett, Margery Maxwell, Fico, Leon Rothier, Louis D'Amore, Paolo Anania and Giordano Trinieri in the cast.

The program for the first part of next week is as follows: Monday, July 19, evening, orchestral concert; Tuesday, July 20, evening, "Lull Lullamermor"; Wednesday, July 21, evening, "Carmen"; Thursday, July 22, afternoon, children's program evening, "Aida."

$1,000 FIRE AT FORT SHERIDAN HOSPITAL
First Serious Blaze in two Years
 Department Commended for Good Work

A fire of unknown origin broke out in the medical department storehouse at Fort Sheridan Tuesday morning, caused about $1,000 worth of loss. This is the only fire of any consequence that has occurred since the opening of the hospital the fort two years ago. A box inquiry, after special investigation commended the fire department the fort for excellent work in bringing what promised to be a bad flagration. It will be remembered at the time of the building of the great hospital, many predicted the place would be a fire trap, but also speaks well for the efficiency of the fire department's post.

FINAL TRYOUT SUNDAY FOR LIFE SAVING CLUB

Last Friday afternoon three members of the Young Men's crew which is being organized by John Peters as captain. The tryout will be made next Sunday which the members will be selected.

The Young Men's club has just maintained a crew which has proved most efficient service the summer. It is hoped that careful selection of men for year's crew that the high standard gained in previous years may be maintained.
