

"The Bank of Personal Service"

A Modern Maxim

"A man is judged, not alone by the company he keeps, but by the manner in which he pays his bills."

The fellow who produces a roll of bills and peels off the number required to meet an obligation might formerly have created a favorable impression.

Nowadays people are likely to wonder why he isn't progressive enough to keep his money in bank and check it out as needed.

How do you pay your bills?

THE SPA CONFERENCE

The conference now being held at Spa in Belgium between representatives of the allied powers and of Germany has for its object the definite settlement of the amount of the indemnity to be paid by the central powers to the allies, and the compliance with the requirements of the conditions imposed by the victors upon the vanquished at the time of the armistice. The indemnity is to be paid not only in money, but in coal, in surrendered war material, in railroad equipment, etc. There is also the important matter of German disarmament for which there has been an extension of time, owing to the internal disorders in Germany. It is felt, however, that the Germans have taken advantage of this condition to keep under arms a much larger body of troops than was needed and now notice has been served upon them that unless they come to time unpleasant consequences will follow.

It is hard to understand the working of the German mind. It is a question whether even now they realize that they have been soundly beaten and it is almost certain that they think they are no more to blame for the calamities that have fallen upon Europe than the French, the British and the Italians. Now that the war is over they seem to think that it is ungenerous and unfair to impose hard conditions upon them, their former adversaries should let by-gones be by-gones and welcome them back with open arms into the fellowship of nations.

It does not seem to enter into the German mind that they committed a great crime against civilization when they entered upon war and that having been defeated they must pay a just penalty, and that they must bring forth fruits meet for repentance before they can be received back into the society of decent people.

This is well illustrated by the difficulty the German delegates are making with regard to the delivery of coal from their Ruhr district to France in compliance with the armistice conditions.

During the war the Germans, when they were obliged to retreat from the Lens district in Northern France, wantonly and without military necessity destroyed and flooded the mines from which a large part of the fuel required by French industry was derived. They did this to injure France, not to benefit themselves, and now they assume an air of injured innocence when they are required to make good a part of the loss.

No greater mistake could be made by the allies than to fail in firmness in exacting from Germany the just penalty of its misdeeds. The German mind has no respect for any argument but force, and clemency is to them only a sign of weakness. Think for a moment what terms the German war lords would have imposed upon their victims if they had been victorious! There would have been no clemency and no hesitation about exacting reparation.

For the future peace and safety of the world the Germans must be made to understand that they were engaged in a criminal enterprise when they attacked Belgium and France, and that they have been soundly beaten, and that they must show some signs of repentance and a better mind before they can be welcomed back into the family of civilized nations.

SPEEDING

The authorities of our city have been lenient and generous in their dealings with the drivers of automobiles. They do not want to levy blackmail upon them and at present they have no motorcycle policeman patrolling the roads.

The majority of motorists appreciate the attitude on the part of our police force and do not abuse the liberty accorded them. Now and then, however, some speed maniac endangers the lives of citizens by reckless driving. It is a wonder that there have been so few accidents.

We note that a valuable dog was killed on South Green Bay road Tuesday evening. It might have been a child. Reasonable caution avoids such accidents, and unless motorists use such caution, it may be necessary to police the roads again and to fine offenders.
