Italian workmen seizing the factories. The coal heavers will do great work as expert accountants, and the ditch diggers will be wonderful sales managers.

The fall bonfire is a grand institution, but you don't need to delay starting it until wash day when the wind blows toward your neighbor's clothesline.

The people who allow dead leaves to lie around their grounds till the wind blows them off are encouraging their neighbors to deliver them an equal supply by the same means.

The politicians who are trying to win votes out of social unrest may regret it some day when they have a relative blown up by a bomb explosion.
