7,398 STUDENTS AT NORTHWESTERN

600 INCREASE DURING 1920

University Had to Turn Away 1,000 Students Two Years Because of Lack of Room

By recent count Northwestern university, Chicago and Evanston departments, had a total registration of 7,398 students during the current year, 1920-'21. This is a matter of some 600 more than the year, 1919-'20, and may lift Northwestern a peg in the list of "big ten" universities in America. The "big ten" as announced by an Eastern bureau last fall were, in their order of student attendance: New York University, University of California, Michigan University, Columbia, University of Illinois, University of Minnesota, University of Pennsylvania, University of Wisconsin, Northwestern University.

The registration at Northwestern is the net grand total of both semesters in the Evanston and Chicago schools and is divided as follows: Liberal Arts 1790, Graduate School 227, Engineering College 160, Oratory 201, Music 325, Commerce, Evanston department 285, or a total for the Evanston branches of 2,988.

Chicago Schools: Commerce 3,119, Law 186, Medical 431, and Dental 674, a total for the Chicago departments of 4,410. The Joseph Medill School of Journalism has 118 students who are included in the School of Commerce registration.

Northwestern, because of lack of dormitory and class room space, has had to turn away about 1,000 students the last two years and therefore the plan for new buildings on its nine-acre Chicago campus site may be pushed with new zeal as soon as building costs recede and the time for requsting public aid becomes more propitious.

ELECTRIC CONSUMPTION LARGE

Figures show that the average person now uses more than 12 times the amount of electricity that he used 18 years ago. An army of 1,400,000 men and women are owners now of stocks and bonds of the electric companies and more than $300,000,000 of public funds in the hands of insurance companies and $1,700,000 in bank funds are invested in public utility securities.

Conservatives and Progressives

A business man who recently returned from France, was telling how conservative people are in that country and how they won't move out of their old ruts. They are not very strong on advertising. If a merchant is asked to use publicity methods, he will often say, "If I should advertise and get more business, I would have to enlarge my shop and put on more help."

The hustling American business man is just the opposite. He is always planning for the time when he can branch out and handle more goods, which means of course occupying more room and employing more helpers.

That is one reason why American prosperity has been so much greater than the business success of the more conservative nations of Europe. It also suggests why some business concerns are stationery while others go ahead. Some men do not have the courage to branch out for bigger business planning for more trade, and are developing the advertising campaigns that produce it.

HORSE POWER

Chicago.—If a horse delivers a horsepower, then it would take nineteen million of the twenty-one million horses in the United States to furnish the power now supplied by central electric stations of the country. In 1902 less than a million and a half horses would have sufficed.

Every year sees and increase in the number of houseorgans published. Results prove it is one of the most predictive kinds of advertising.

That printed matter only is cheap which is so good that it pulls business. Figured on the basis of results the printer who is dubbed "a little high" is just about the cheapest printer in town. And that's more than a mere phrase—it's truth.

A $33,000,000 GIFT

When Herbert Hoover set out four months ago to raise $33,000,000 to relieve the immediate needs of 3,500,000 starving children in Europe, many observers said it couldn't be done. They felt the American people were not sympathetic with human suffering unless it was found in their own country, and that no such amount would ever be sent elsewhere.

That vast amount has now been raised, and these pathetic little waifs of tragedy are carried through until another harvest, when their need may be greatly relieved.
