

WHERE HONEY IS GATHERED

It is gathered wherever flowers bloom in profusion, as far north as Finland and farther north than Quebec, Canada, during the summer months. The warmer climates of course are more favorable to honey production, since flowers bloom in greater profusion and during a longer period. As a rule, honey in the warmer climates is, therefore, lower in price than in colder countries. The honey of those countries is usually stronger in flavor than that produced in the north, the southern flowers being more rank and of a stronger fragrance.

Eat Honey. It is Nature's best sweet.

PHONE WORKED TOO WELL

New York Police at First Distrusted Important Message That Came From St. Louis.

The telephone has frequently played its part in catching thieves, but here's a case in which it was almost instrumental in letting a man accused of embezzlement go unmolested—and all because it did its work so well!

The telephone in the New York detective headquarters rang one morning recently and a voice said, "This is Detective Aylward of St. Louis, speaking." The voice asked the arrest of a certain man who had gone to one of the New York hotels, and that he be held for further instructions.

So clear was the tone as the man made his request that the police were at first in doubt as to whether the call could have come all the way from St. Louis and were inclined to the theory that they were being hoaxed by some New York practical joker. However, detectives were sent out to make a tour of the hotels of the city, and in the meantime further particulars arrived from St. Louis.

The man was finally located and when arrested had in his possession $13,000, according to the police. The charge against him in St. Louis was the embezzlement of $14,000 and receiving stolen property.

PISTACHE TREES IN AMERICA

Experiment of Government Plant Bureau Seems Likely to Prove a Complete Success.

Pistache nuts, which are familiar to us chiefly in confectionery and as a source of flavorings, are now produced in considerable quantities in the United States.

The largest and sturdiest trees that grow in the deserts of the old world—the Sahara, the arid slopes of the Euphrates valley in Asia Minor, and the dry wastes of Beluchistan and Persia—are wild pistaches. This fact suggested to the United States government plant bureau the idea of introducing the pistache into our own Southwest. Seedlings, grown in its experimental gardens at Chica, Cal., have been distributed by thousands to fruit growers in California, Texas, Utah and elsewhere.

Seeds from old-world desert trees were obtained to furnish drought-resisting stocks; and, for grafting and budding the best varieties were brought from Sicily, where the finest cultivated pistache nuts are produced. Also superior varieties were imported from Asia Minor, where pistaches are commonly eaten roasted and salted, like peanuts.

Find Gold Under Fossils.

In Alaska the bones, and often the entire bodies, of extinct animals, such as the mammoth, the mastodon, the reindeer and the bison, are found most abundantly in the layers of soil directly above the gold-bearing gravels. So intimate is this association between fossil animal remains and the auriferous deposits that many explorers who have visited Alaska say that the fossils serve the prospectors as indexes of the metallic richness of the soil.

In ancient times both the gold and the bones and bodies of the animals were deposited at the bottom of valleys by the action of rivers and smaller streams, many of which have now disappeared. Consequently, the appearance of fossils is an almost certain indication that gold will be found in the neighborhood. The cabins of many miners are ornamented with huge tusks and antlers, unearthed in the diggings.

True Thrift.

While it is true that thrift is not miserliness and that parsimony does not bring happiness or upbuilding, it cannot be disputed that judicious saving forms the only basis of economic progress and lasting happiness. Thoughtless spending may bring transitory joy, but such practices also come accompanied by the torture of worry and the more tangible realities of poverty. Also the question must be viewed from the standpoint of social progress.

We must not live for self alone. Our duty must run further than self-pleasure and individual happiness. We must be constructive, not only because it is better for us, but also because it is better for all mankind. Let us be extremely careful in discouraging practices of thrift, even though it may seem that the individual is denied certain ephemeral and fictitious pleasures.—Thrift Magazine.

There's Stock and Stock.

A man who bore the air of a cattleman entered the office of a western public utility company and made inquiry about the company's plan of selling its securities direct to its customers.

He listened for a while and rolled a generous chew of tobacco around and then hit the cuspidor ten feet away without an effort.

"Wat, Pardner," he began, "that ere stock what you sell don't eat, don't drink and don't take up no room. It's a d—n sight surer than my stock right now. Guess I'll just corral some of your stock right now and stop worrying."

BUSINESS OUTLOOK FOR THE COMING YEAR

By CLINT MCDADE (Continued from Last Week)

A German millionaire is worth about $4,400,000 in good old Uncle Sam coin. This is, of course, an extreme illustration but at that, it gives food for thought. There is a good deal of speculation as to what would happen if Germany would repudiate the mark. The fact is that to all intents and purposes the mark has already been repudiated. The situation is rather ironical in many of its aspects. I have heard or read that the amount of money spent by Americans in buying up marks for a rise in price would pay the entire German war debt. How true this is, I have no way of knowing, but it is difficult to imagine any easier way of meeting reparations payment than by printing fiat money.

Another queer aspect of the situation is that having been denied credit by the international bankers, Germany has resorted to meeting her bills with fiat money on which she pays no interest, while the nations who have credit are staggering under heavy bond issues on which interest payments must be met regularly.

The rising price of Sterling would indicate that England's purchasing power is getting buyer all the time and the outlook for trade with Japan, China and other far-eastern countries is excellent. These facts present a real ray of hope in the otherwise gloomy foreign situation.

There is no question but that wages will continue to decline during 1922 just as fast as the cost of living will permit. Labor troubles do not occupy the head-line of the daily papers as much as they did two or three years ago but there is certain to be serious difficulties in the coal and railroad labor situation before the spring is over and that will be followed by trouble in other industries as the necessity for reductions makes itself felt.

The employment situation is considerably better than it was in the summer of 1921, but there is nothing to indicate that improvements will continue very rapidly during 1922 tho the trend will undoubtedly be for the better.

There has been very little residential building during the past six years and it is safe to assume that residential building in 1922 will be very good and should be followed by a substantial reduction of rents in the fall. This will be especially true if freight rates come down, making it possible to transport lumber at more reasonable rates. On the other hand there will be very little industrial building as the present capacity of industrial plants is far in excess of the needs to take care of 1922 activities.

The Administration at Washington is undoubtedly taking dictation from the bankers and while this brings alarm from one faction and joy from another, I believe the majority of the people are agreed that this makes for economy and the safe and sane return or normal business conditions.

1922 will be a year of bargains. The business concern which has built up a surplus during the past few years will be able to buy up weaker competitors for a song. The farmer who has ready money can buy a neighbor's land at bargain rates and the man who wishes to start in business for himself will find excellent opportunities if he investigates carefully.

There is persistent talk of impending mergers in steel, copper, oil and sugar circles. If contemplated mergers are actually effected, lower production cost and corresponding profits should be the result.

Interest rates will continue to decline during 1922. The Federal Reserve Bank rates have already fallen from 7 per cent to 4 per cent and 4-1-2 per cent and commercial paper from 8 per cent to 4-1-2 and 5 per cent.

The metropolitan banks have more cash than they know what to do with. This will remain the case until the revival becomes general. These banks are investing their surplus funds in government obligations, underlying railroad bonds and various short-time investments. This means that bonds will continue to advance in price, especially good non-tax exempt bonds yielding a high rate of interest. Tax exempt securities are really already higher than they should be when compared with the issues which are not tax exempt.

Soldier bonus legislation may cause a slight temporary recession in bond prices but the indications are that nothing can effectually stop the upward trend which started early in 1921. In support of my opinion that bond prices will continue to advance during 1922, I will say that in 1874, 1885, 1894, 1904, 1908 and 1915 bond prices went up. Each year mentioned followed a period of violent deflation similar to 1921.

As bond prices get so high that the yield appears unattractive, idle funds will gradually flow into preferred stocks, dividend paying common stocks and finally into the purely speculative issues in the order indicated.

James J. Hill once said the man who is always a bear on America will eventually go broke. Unless the time has come when the bears are to cash in and the country go to the dogs, this is an opportune moment for the man with money to use it, whether his bent is for a farm, a business, a bond, or pure speculation like some of the reorganized railroads, whose securities look like a mighty good gamble.
