

Also the young business fellows seem to think they are appointed to wait on the stenographers.

A monument has been erected to the man who found the North Pole, but the man who discovered the barber's pole remains unwept, unhonored, and unsung.

Art's D. 131

Very few persons realize the value and cost of plumbing services. They too often classify a skilled mechanic's services as a mere labor charge.

The plumbing dealer has a certain service to perform. Today you may want a faucet repaired, tomorrow an old fashioned lavatory replaced by a modern sanitary fixture. Therefore your plumbing dealer must have an organization, a stock of goods, and an equipment of tools equal to any emergency that may arise.

He must have sufficient capital to provide the above service, and to carry your account until it is paid. He must carry liability and compensation insurance to protect you against loss. He must be an authority on plumbing in order to solve the many complicated problems that arise in plumbing installations.

This is the kind of service that you and the rest of the public demand. But efficient service of this kind costs the plumbing dealer money, just as it does any other merchant or manufacturer. Thus the wages paid a skilled mechanic, plus the cost of maintaining this service, plus a small profit, easily equals the price you pay; which after all is as cheap a service as you can buy, all points and values considered. Provided, of course, that you secure such services from a reputable and responsible firm.
