Start THIS New Year RIGHT

Make a firm resolve to end the tedious, wearing down, expensive and altogether unnecessary habit of doing the family wash at home.

Send it to the Laundry and have it done either wet, wash, rough dry or finished complete. You will thank us at the end of the year for our suggestion.

PUBLIC LIBRARY

In January 1741, in the city of Philadelphia, were published the first two magazines of this country. One was the "Monthly Review" published by Andrew Bradford; the other the "General Magazine and Historical Chronicle" published by Benjamin Franklin. As these two publishers were at dagger points with each other, the stormy and colorful career of the magazine in America began with a royal row. By the beginning of the 1800's there were at least forty-five magazines being published in America, including musical, military, religious and children's magazines. But to us, today, even forty-five magazines would seem poor fare indeed.

In the Highland Park Public Library are hundreds of bound volumes of magazines, a few of them dating back to the Civil War. These magazines have by no means outlived their usefulness. They are full of excellent material and interesting illustrations. They contain first hand information; they reflect the spirit of their time and tell what people thought of themselves and each other more vividly than could any book written today about those times. These magazines are available to anyone at any time. Come and use them.

New Books Added. The following new books were added to the Library last week, the author's name being given first, followed by the book title:

MUSICAL SIDE OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

NEW SIDE LIGHT GIVEN

Interesting Phase of Life of Great American Recalled; Invented Harmonica Wrote Ballads

In connection with Franklin Day observances at the opening of National Thrift Week, Jan. 17, the birthday anniversary of Benjamin Franklin, the following interesting story of the musical side of Franklin is timely:

In the many pictures we have of Benjamin Franklin as a statesman, philosopher, inventor and scientist, one of the least known portrays his musical side.

The kite and the key, drawing electricity from the sky, are familiar to all of us. How many know of his invention of the Harmonica? No, not the mouth organ, but a musical instrument thus described by Webster:

Harmonica—An instrument invented by Benjamin Franklin, consisting of a series of hemispherical glasses turning on an axis and played by touching the edges with a dampened finger.

And we know Franklin's wise teachings of thrift, or at least we are learning something of their meaning through National Thrift Week, which is so fittingly opened by his birthday anniversary, but how little we know of him as a lover of music, a concert and opera goer, a student of the musical trend of his time, familiar with church and secular music, both in Europe and America, a critic and an analyst, performer on his musical glasses and the harp, guitar and violin—Yes, and a song writer, too!

The music industry is proud to acknowledge Franklin, the inventor of a musical instrument, as a member; even though his Harmonica did not survive after a period of popularity in this country and abroad from 1762 to about 1840.

O. G. Sonneck, former librarian of the music division, Library of Congress (now of G. Shirmer) has assembled the most authoritative statements about Benjamin Franklin's musical side, in his "Essays on Music." He says, "It is clear that Franklin must have given much critical thought to problems in music. Probably his remarks on other subjects besides folk-songs and the harmonic structures of melodies were not less original."

This follows letters from Franklin in London around 1765, in which he expresses ideas on melody, usually considered of newest date, and which it took the psychologists of music more than a century to explain, prove and develop.

One of the letters was to Peter Franklin, and it started as follows: "Dear Brother: I like your ballad, and think it will be adapted for your purpose of discountenancing expensive foppery and encouraging industry and frugality." He advises the adaptation of words to "old, simple ditties," but agrees to do his best to get a new tune composed for his brother's ballad.

When the reporter calls do not "hang up." Better to have authentic news than suppositions.

The school pupils of this city hope there will not be another war, as it will make something more to learn about in history.
