TRANSFER POWER BY RADIO IS PLAN

Experiments Result in Discovery of Interesting and Valuable Facts

Recent experiments in an eastern United States engineering institute on power transmission by radio, have resulted in the discovery of some interesting phenomena. It is known that wireless waves may be more or less directed in one vertical plane. They have never been directed in a single line. Now it is possible to so direct the waves that no one not in a straight line between the two stations could receive them. This opens up possibilities of power transmission.

If the waves may be so controlled that they are in a straight line, there will be very little energy lost due to promiscuous radiation. Hence, if one kilowatt could be sent out, very nearly one kilowatt would be received. Why has no one ever done this before? The answer is simple. Wireless waves in use today are about 300 metres or longer. These long waves are many more times liable to radiation and diffraction than shorter ones. The problem, therefore, is to make short waves. Previous experiments have been conducted with waves around 50 meters in length, and now waves of the unprecedented shortness of 45 centimeters have been produced. With an apparatus capable of producing waves of, say, 50 centimeters, it would be comparatively simple to make them transmit power.

Country correspondents often report that such and such a man has gone to work for somebody else. It is sometimes news when some people go to work.

Complaint is made about all the folks that chew gum, but their jaws are more usefully employed than if they were chewing the rag.

Perhaps one reason why more of the girls don't run for office is that their time is so much taken up by competing in the beauty contests.

CALLS ATTENTION:

Haven't you often said to yourself: "How I wish the dainty things I am so proud of would always stay as fresh and beautiful as when they first came from the store"? Every woman knows that once washed these garments seem to lose something of the beautiful finish they had when first brought home. This applies not only to your personal garments, but to your children's wash clothes; your table cloths and napkins; your sheets, pillow cases and bed-spreads; and to all your summer dresses and aprons and waists, in fact, anything and everything washable from lace curtains to the rug on the floor, fully satisfying everyone.
