THE SPIRIT OF PATRIOTISM

The splendid interest manifested in this year's Memorial Day observances by citizens generally renews faith in the soundness of the American people at heart and refutes the claim that the insidious propaganda of the peace-at-any-price fanatics is under the national patriotic spirit. It takes more than idle words and tin-horn sophistry to kill the spirit that led the heroes of the Civil war from Bull Run to Appomattox, that roused the country to the aid of suffering Cuba in 1898, and that sent millions of the youth of America carrying the torch of Freedom overseas in 1917 and 1918. So long as the glorious records of these heroes' achievements are remembered, so long will there be found other heroes ready to uphold the freedom for which they fought and died, eager to keep the Star Spangled Banner still waving, and with courage to nail that banner to the masthead of our national hopes and defend it against a world, if need be, that this republic may overcome and endure.

COMMENCEMENT TIME

Commencement season nears, a season of hopes realized and ambitions achieved, when youth looks forth on life with rosy visions and faces the future with castledreams.

'Twas ever thus, and thus 'twill ever be. Youth with high hopes fares forth to meet success or defeat, fearless of what may befall, treading with eager, daring step the slender bridges that span the gulfs of chance, breasting with high resolve the heights of endeavor. Without the enthusiasm of the 'teens and the twenties, the forties and fifties would be barren and life in the "sear and yellow leaf" long 'er the harvest time.

It is good to have commencement season with us again, good to note in the faces of the graduates the growth of determination to make the most of manhood's heritage, of womanhood's budding charm. There is inspiration in these happy last days of school, not only for these young folks, but also for their elders who renew their youth in the present joys and happy expectations of their children.

These boys and girls are about to launch their barques on the sea of life. Whither that voyage will carry them with its favoring breezes and baffling storms none can foretell. The utmost we can do is to give them "Godspeed" and a fair start, and trust that somehow, somewhere they will reach in safety a fair haven.

THE JUNE BRIDEGROOM

Who notices the June bridegroom, or any other month's bridegroom for that matter? He's only a passenger on this trip, though he may be the conductor later, when the music and the flags and the flowers and the other frills are long gone and forgotten. What he wears or how he looks makes little difference. Of course he has to wear something, "conventional black" or unconventional anything else he has the price to buy or can get without the price, but who pauses to consider his sartorial embellishments when there is a bride and anywhere from one to a half-dozen bridesmaids, with all the finery and frippery that as many modistes and beauty experts can contrive, disporting themselves in the front row of the big show?

Poor, deluded bridegroom? He's nothing more than a necessary appurtenance to any wedding. To be sure it wouldn't be a wedding without him; if it could, some way of getting rid of the encumbrance would have been devised long ago. But he has to be around somewhere handy, and so they make the best of him—which is a sorry effort, often, at that. However, after all, he's the fellow who serves as a hook on which to hang the whole show, and if he behaves well, sometimes he gets a line or two mention in the society column to the effect that he is a "nice young man and has promising prospects."

Later things are different in a measure. The bridegroom gets his inning, all right, but when he comes to bat there's no flowers and soft music and dim cathedral light effect. It's the real thing he's up against, and he has to make good or take the gaff; and if he gets away with it nobody thinks that he has done anything more than he ought to do. After a while he is promoted. He's "papa" next, and his troubles increase. If he fails in life's hard struggle, it's just what somebody predicted "when that poor girl was a good manager and kept him in line."

A bride is a bride, until she is divorced, but a bridegroom is just a man to the end of the chapter. And if he lives up to that, he has done about all that is expected of him.

FATHER OF COUNTY CLERK HENDEE DEAD

End Came Last Week at Home in Waukegan; Held Several Public Offices

Albert L. Hendee, 77 years old, one of the most prominent and influential men in Lake County, died last Thursday at his home in Waukegan following a serious illness of several months, death being due to dropsy. He was the father of Lew A. Hendee, county clerk.

Among the public positions he held were the following: Assessor of Fremont and supervisor from 1873 to 1875; county treasurer from 1886 to 1890; assistant county clerk under Lewis Dorsett, upon whose death in 1893 he succeeded Mr. Dorsett in office, holding the position of county clerk from then until he retired in 1910.

He served as alderman of the Third Ward in Waukegan in 1892 under Mayor J. W. Besley.

Mr. Hendee is survived by his wife and one son, Llewellyn A. Hendee, present county clerk, and one grand daughter, Elizabeth Hendee, daughter of Mrs. Evert Hendee.

COUNTY JUDGE SEES HARDING AT CAPITAL

County Judge Perry L. Persons returned recently from Washington, D. C., where he shook hands with President Harding, and also saw "Laddie," the famous dog of the chief executive.

Judge persons was a delegate to the National Conference of Social Workers, which organization is allied with the National Probation and Juvenile associations. There were 5,000 delegates at the convention, the various groups being in session from June 14 until tonight.

President Harding gave a reception for the delegates on the south grounds of the executive mansion, which is for the exclusive use of the president and his family. He shook hands with the delegates, and later Mrs. Harding joined her husband at the reception. "Laddie" was also in attendance. A marine band furnished the music for the occasion.
