ELKS TEAM DEFEATS IRVING PARK NINE

SCORE IS SEVEN TO THREE

Good Contest Except for Bobbles by Visiting Fielder in Third; Play Arcades Next Sunday

In last Sunday's game the Elks team defeated the Irving Park nine in a game that was an excellent exhibition, except for a blow-up in the third inning, when the visitors left fielder missed two fly balls and five runs streaked in for the home team before the riot was stopped. The remainder of the game was tighter and both sides showed some good stuff. The score was 7 to 3.

Shannon of the home team kept up his home-run reputation by scoring another. Two-base hits were made by Shannon, Carmody and Herkus.

The box score follows:

Next Sunday the Elks team plays Samuelson's Arcades of Chicago, said to be one of the strongest teams of this class. Last Sunday the Arcades met the Mary Gardens, perhaps the strongest semi-pro team in Chicago, according to the dopesters, and lost by the small margin of 4 to 6. With the Arcades for opponents the Elks are promising an interesting and hard-fought battle for next Sunday here.

PUBLIC LIBRARY

The following annotations are of new books which are in particular demand at the Public Library:
Life of Christ by Giovanni Papini:
The writing of this book marked the conversion to Christianity of the celebrated Florentine philosopher and man of letters, after years of denial and unbelief. It was during the war that he turned to the study of the Gospels and the story of Christ, reaching the conviction that the "sole solution of the evil of the world is the transformation of human souls, that this cannot be brought about except by means of religion; and that the most perfect and suitable is that taught by Christ." With the desire of reaching people who do not go to Church, or read the Bible, or listen to sermons, the author has made this book as popular and readable as possible.
Men of the Inner Jungle by W. F. Alder:
The author's aim is to make understandable and real the daily life, in all its phases, of a savage people, still lingering in the depth of its jungle home, remote from civilization thousands of years behind the development of most of the human race. The book is a spirited narrative of a very interesting experience.
Dr. Johnson by A. Edward Newton:
The plot of this play is attenuated almost to the vanishing point, but it is sufficient to enable the immortal Samuel Johnson to stride in slovenly habiliments about his lodgings, to come down in thumping phrases upon his hapless servant, and extinguish Boswell with a word, and to engage in repartee with Goldsmith and Garrick.
After Death by Camille Flammarion:
This is the final volume of Flammarion's famous trilogy "Death and its Mystery", completing a stupendous work on the existence and the survival of the human soul after death. This distinguished French astronomer, after fifty years of study presents spiritism as something to be investigated and not as a doctrine. He is careful always to remain within the realm of pure science. Etiquette by Emily Post:
This complete work on polite conduct and every-day ethics is written by a woman whose authority on the subject is beyond dispute and whose reputation as a writer is of long standing. No detail is too insignificant to be explained, from the selection of a visiting card to the mystery of eating corn on the cob. Matters of clothes for men and women are treated with the same fullness of information and accuracy as are the questions of furnishing their houses and instructing their servants. Apart from the wealth of social information this book contains, it is a delight in its sparkling style and a treasure-house of worldly wisdom.

Considering that 50,000 people trapped through the White House within four days recently, Mrs. Harding must have had quite a job sweeping the floors.
So far the folks who have acquired wealth are not complaining any of the lack of warm friends.
