

PROFESSORS SELECT FOUR GREATEST MEN

LIVING IN LAST CENTURY

Six include Lincoln, 4 Darwin and Pasteur and Wilson; Woman Educator Says Women Eligible

Replying to a question submitted by a New York newspaper as to who were the four greatest men of the last century, five out of six professors at Northwestern University selected Abraham Lincoln, four chose Darwin and Pasteur and two nominated Woodrow Wilson. No definition of the word "great" was made and the professors merely were asked the question and given an hour in which to select the four men. Several of the educators refused on the ground that "greatness" must first be analyzed. One woman who is prominent on the faculty begged to be excused because the question referred only to men. "I should select at least three women," she explained. President Walter Dill Scott's selections were as follows: 1, Darwin; 2, Pasteur; 3, Abraham Lincoln; 4, Woodrow Wilson.

Prof. Henry Crew, head of the department of physics: 1, Einstein; 2, Lincoln; 3, Maxwell; 4, Pasteur.

Prof. William A. Lacy, professor of zoology: 1, Pasteur; 2, Darwin; 3, Claude Bernard, French physiologist; 4, Gregory Mendel, experimental heredity.

Puts Lincoln First Prof. John Adams Scott, professor of Greek Language and literature: 1, Lincoln; 2, General Booth, Salvation Army; 3, Carl Marx; 4, Charles Darwin.

Professor Clyde L. Gross, associate professor of history: 1, Darwin; 2, Abraham Lincoln; 3, Woodrow Wilson; 4, Guglielmo Marconi.

Prof. John E. Stout, head of department of religious education: 1, Lincoln; 2, Horace Mann; 3, Pasteur; 4, Gladstone.

Prof. Stout made his choice "tentative," as he said the word "great" is so susceptible to many connotations that he hesitated to try to make a reply without explanation. Prof. Crew stipulated that the most interesting feature of his answer would be omitted if the reasons for his selections were not printed.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PAVILION DESCRIBED

FOR BRITISH EXPOSITION

Handsome Structure well Placed at Wembley, Near London In Advantageous Location for Display

The Christian Science Pavilion now being erected at Wembley for the forthcoming British Empire Exhibition is situated on the eastern side of the exhibition. The site is next to the building of the Newfoundland Government, and is separated by only a few yards from the British Government building. This will be one of the most important features and is reached by a fine avenue direct from the stadium and the center of the exhibition. The direct path from this point to the amusement park passes between the British Government Building on the one hand and the Newfoundland Building and the Christian Science Pavilion on the other.

The exterior of the pavilion, while designed to harmonize with the severity of the architectural style predominating at the exhibition, has a beauty of its own, and reminiscent of the dignified garden houses so often found in the grounds of old Georgian homes. It is 50 feet long by 22 feet, 6 inches in the widest part, stands on a site 55 feet by 37 feet 6 inches. The center portion of the building is recessed to form a small paved forecourt which will be bright with flowers, from which is reached a covered porch. Leading off this porch is the reading room. This is 27 feet 6 inches by 15 feet and has windows on three sides. It is entered through the librarian's room, from which it is separated by a glazed screen. The pavilion also contains a roof for the display of The Christian Science Monitor. This room will be 25 feet 6 inches long by 13 feet 6 inches wide at its greatest width. Besides this there will be a writing room and a room for the accommodation of the staff.

The construction of the building and the care of it when completed, has been undertaken by the Christian Science branch churches and societies in London and the counties in which London is situated, the Christian Science Monitor explains. The object that they have had in view has been to provide a dignified and appropriate structure in which to house their enterprise. It is expected that the pavilion will form in its own way, and within its clearly defined sphere, a pleasant feature for many of the visitors to the exhibition. Travelers from all over the world, who are interested in Christian Science, or The Christian Science Monitor, will have the opportunity of meeting their friends there, or of making use of the reading room, where ample facilities will be provided for quiet and study. It sometimes happens that people visiting an exhibition of such gigantic proportions feel the need of a secluded spot where they can withdraw from the pressure of the crowds and the stress of sight-seeing. This pavilion is designed to meet just this need, and it is hoped also that the many expected visitors will there find the opportunity of familiarizing themselves in some measure with special features relating to The Christian Science Monitor, of which many of them are at present only partially informed, and that by this means a new enthusiasm for this world newspaper will be aroused. Altogether it is hoped that the Christian Science Pavilion will provide an extremely attractive unassuming feature of the exhibition.

MORE LIGHT KEEPS CHURCHGOERS AWAKE

Expert on Illumination Declares Houses of Worship Condition Causes Sleep

Drowsiness among members of a church congregation would be almost unknown if places of worship had better illumination, says Prof. M. Lukiesh, illumination expert. He advises brighter lighting to keep the congregation alert and active-minded.

It might be a good idea to keep an eye on those folks who claim that everybody is dishonest.

HART OIL BURNER

There are a few fundamental facts that you should consider before you make a final selection, and they are:

1. The adaptability of your present heating plant.
2. The mechanical features and the simplicity of operation.
3. The price and cost of maintenance.
4. The responsibility of the manufacturers.

The Hart Oil Burner will safely stand these tests, no matter how rigidly you may apply them.

MORE ACTION AND LESS NOISE

There is a good deal of sense in the words of Senator Ralph Cameron of Arizona in discussing present conditions in Washington. In a recent interview sent out by the National Press association Senator Cameron, referring to the "oil" investigation, is quoted as follows:

"I believe in investigating anything that should be investigated. I think the stand taken by President Coolidge in the matter is one that will commend itself to every thinking American. With characteristic fairness he refuses to judge a man or men until they have been tried. I cannot help but wonder sometimes if some of the investigations proposed are not incited by those who would have them made for personal or political gain. If we are going to investigate this, that or the other, let us put politics to one side in these investigations, punish those who are guilty, acquit those who are innocent and then let us settle down and try to do something for the people of the country. This is no time for cheap politics, or political "bunkum." Sleight-of-hand never milked a cow or turned a furrow. What the people of the country need is more action and less noise."

ANOTHER PLAN

What looks like a better move in the pursuit of the illusive dream of world peace "that still allures and still eludes" is the offer by the World Federation of Education associations of a prize of $25,000 for a plan to educate the children of all nations so as to bring about better international understanding and to eliminate hatred, both racial and national. The contest is open to individuals and organizations in all countries. It is pretty well understood that despite other peace schemes, which, in the final analysis, directly or indirectly, would entangle the United States in a world court, a league of nations or some other alliance detrimental to this country's interests and for the benefit of Europe generally and for the benefit of certain great interests in particular, no peace is in sight in this generation, probably in particular, no Old habits and old animosities cannot be overcome in a generation or two. All the great reforms of the ages have come through slow processes and always, in a broad sense, by education. Education is the hope of democracy, the one factor that may save civilization from a world-ruining war. It is impossible to teach men and nations, who have a history of war in the past and an experience of war and hate in the present, that universal peace is possible. But, if the children of the nations were taught that peace is always more desirable than war, except where national honor is involved, perhaps there would be less warlike attitude, less antagonism among the peoples of the world when these children become men and women of their respective countries. But in all this seeking after peace let it be remembered that there can be no one-sided peace; it is folly to consider the arguments of the pacifists who say that the nation which has no means of defense is safe because it will not seek war. The kind of peace that nations will get is the peace, described by a recent speaker, where the lion and the lamb lie down together—with the lamb inside the lion—and that is not the kind of peace this country wants.

EARLY PHONE USERS COULDN'T FIND EARS

Pioneer Telephone Man Relates Curious Difficulty Met In Early Days

One of the most important and difficult jobs in introducing the telephone, back in 1877, was teaching the subscribers the correct way to use them. One of the pioneers who introduced the telephone into Delaware, tells of an amusing experience which suggests that anatomy lessons should have been given the early users.

"In 1877 and 1878 very few people had seen a telephone," he says, "and fewer still had used it, so that after a subscriber had been secured, it required considerable effort to impress upon him the most efficient way to use it.

"The people did not know, it seemed, where their ears were. In fact an editor said to me one day: 'You should have someone instruct Mr. So-and-So how to use that telephone you have put in for him. He has rubbed the hair off his head trying to find his ear.'"

The angel Gabriel would better look out how he runs for office in this country, as they would go over his record with minute care.
