RECALLS TALES OF GOLD PROSPECTING

DEATH OF AGED MINER

Old-Time Prospector Dies In Cripple Creek Who Found Millions in Old Days In Mountains

Romantic tales of the huge fortunes taken from the mines of Colorado are revived in Colorado with announcement of the death of W. L. (Lafe) Fyffe, old-time prospector, who was reputed to have made a total of $5,000,000 in the heyday of mining activity in that state—and spent it all.

Fyffe was virtually "broke" when he died, and for the last few years had been employed in the State House of Representatives, Colorado.

Fyffe, who was 65 years old, was known to almost every "old-timer" in Colorado. He lived in the mining camps when history was in the making and had a foremost part in the making of much of it. He was typical of the rapidly disappearing prospector of pioneer days, and his experiences and exploits have figured in numerous fiction stories of the early days of mining in the Rocky Mountain region.

Although silent and taciturn until acquaintanceship had ripened into friendship, Fyffe loved to dwell upon the days when the West was young. His lack of frugality probably prevented him from being one of the richest men in Colorado. But "Lafe" Fyffe considered it a disgrace to keep money.

"Made to Spend"
 "Money was made to spend" was his motto, and he spent with a lavish hand. In the boom days of Leadville and Cripple Creek Fyffe squandered fortune after fortune.

"I'm not happy unless I'm tramping the hills, with a pick and my horse," he frequently told friends. "I feel uncomfortable with so much money. I've got to get rid of it."

Denver acquaintances declared that when Fyffe sold four claims to the famous Portland Mining Company for $500,000 he bought the finest mansion in Cripple Creek. He stocked it with furniture from Europe, costing many thousands of dollars, and hung out a "Welcome All" sign. When some of his guests brought disrepute upon the palatial home by taking advantage of Fyffe's whole-hearted hospitality the prospector wrecked the house and furniture with an axe and then deeded the place for a "consideration of $1."

Six months later Fyffe was "broke again."

Started as a Boy
 Fyffe starting his prospecting career at the age of 14, and in the early mining days when claim jumping was extensive, he is said to have protected the Queen of Hills Mine, single-handed against members of the Annie Lee and Doubtful outfits. The fight for the Queen of Hills claim resulted in the designation of that section of Alma county as Battle Mountain.

When Fyffe was 18 years old he took a fortune out of the Help Mine, on Mount Lincoln, one of the highest mine claims ever worked, it having an elevation of 14,280 feet above sea level.

A few years later the prospector lost his right eye in a mine explosion. Faro bank and poker in the noted gambling resorts of the Leadville and

SELECT STUDENTS FOR UNIVERSITIES

NEW PLAN CONSIDERED

College Dean Tells of Movement to Secure Better Material for Educational Life

A serious attempt to "select" students, who shall enter the university, on a basis not only of high school achievement but of character as well, is to be made at Northwestern University, according to an announcement by Dean Raymond A. Kent, head of the college of liberal arts, who was guest at a dinner recently at the North Shore Hotel. Entertained by the Alumni Association of the College of Liberal Arts and given assurance of the graduates, Dean Kent was called upon for a few remarks. He then announced the new plan of student selectivity, speaking in part as follows:

Distinct Movement
 "There is a distinct movement in higher education today to recognize problems of admission of students as more clearly educational in their nature than mechanical. The college of liberal arts of Northwestern University recognizes the validity of this stand and is making plans to adapt its organization thereto.

"Heretofore all admissions have gone through the registrar's office. Hereafter admissions will be handled directly in the office of the dean of the college. The office of the registrar will then be enabled to discharge more effectively its functions of records, business and other statistical features which belong distinctly to it.

Important Problem
 "The college recognizes further that one of the most important problems is the selection of prospective students. In order to make this process more effective certain plans are now being very carefully considered. One of these is to secure information additional to that which is now obtained concerning those who apply for admittance. Much valuable data not now obtained can be secured from the high school from which the applicant has been graduated. Other significant information hitherto not asked for can be obtained from business and professional men and women who know the candidates personally. On the basis of such information applicants can be selected more intelligently and the qualification of those who are accepted can be known much better.

"In this connection, there is a great deal to be said in favor of requiring all new students to appear two or three days earlier than other students at the time of registration in the fall. If those requirements were in force it would make it possible to obtain certain information through intelligence tests, physical education examinations and examinations in subjects, for example, such as English. This information could be used in advising the student with regard to his work in college and in placing him in the proper sections of such classes as might be sectioned according to the ability of the individual to do the work in that specific subject.

"Our college is loyal to the old traditions which place scholarship and scholastic achievement as the feature of greatest importance for any student. It recognizes the value and the importance of student activities but recognizes them only as of secondary significance. It believes that it can render a distinctive service to the individuals who come to it. It believes also that unnecessary limitations are placed upon the amount and the quality of this service when proper selection of students is not made."

Harry Wells, 1913, presided, and other speakers were: President Walter Dill Scott, 1895; Marguerite Raeder, 1912. There was music by the university band and Al Steel led in the cheering.

THIRTEEN ELECTED TO ORDER OF COIF

The following article appeared in a recent issue of the Michigan Daily. Bowen Schumacher is a resident of this city.
