LAP HERDMEN TO GET TIPS BY WIRE

"Telephone lines," says a Stockholm dispatch to the London Daily Mail, "are to be laid to the most northerly portion of Lapland in order that the nomad tribes of Lapps may be given meteorological bulletins and information of snow conditions, when they make their Spring and Autumn moves."

When this contemplated telephone construction is completed, civilization will have extended its long tenacles of wire far up beyond the Arctic Circle into the Land of the Midnight Sun. For ten long weeks, during the short Arctic summer, the daylight is unbroken in this far northern country. For a similar period in winter unrelieved darkness shrouds the land.

The wandering Lapps, a diminutive, broadfaced race, of uncertain origin, drive their herds of semi-domesticated reindeer across the lonely uplands of Northern Sweden, working south in the fall, and returning to the summer pasturage of the northern mountains in the late spring. They depend upon the reindeer for meat, milk and hides, eking out a precarious existence by occasional fishing in the lakes and fjords with which Northern Scandinavia abounds.

Related tribes with substantially similar ways of life, are found in upper Norway and the adjacent sections of Russia and Finland. But it is apparently only the Lapps of Sweden who are soon to be assisted in finding suitable feeding-grounds for their reindeer by "meteorological bulletins and difficult work. Not only was it necessary to cross the treacherous Nile by telephone.

These folks who make fun of "hayseeds" may not have noticed the prices that you have to pay for hay in the produce markets.

Your woodwork just hates lye and strong soap—give it a chance with Blue Devil. Adv. 5
